Sir H. Juta: Don't trouble about the economy of the matter. We want to know what the reason is from an engineering point of view. You seem to smile at Mr. Charteris, Mr. Wright, but he has had experience in this country that you have not had.

Witness: I beg to differ there.

Counsel: You tell us that, from an engineering point of view, apart from economy, men can roll as well as mules?

Witness (hesitatingly): Yes.

Counsel: What is the objection, then, to cutting up sections of 50 yards, instead of 100 yards.

Witness: Because it will take up more time.

Counsel: Now, are there any other reasons? Except on the ground of time, these small sections could have been rolled by men just as well as by mules?

Witness: We were complaining of the scarcity of labour at that time. When labour was scarce, I could not see 60 or 70 men taken off and put on a roller.

Cross-examination continued: Witness added an extra "spur" in July, 1902. He objected to the plaintiffs' "spurs," because they did not consolidate the work. The two "spurs" put in by plaintiffs were consolidated by beaters, because they were without heavy rollers. He offered to let plaintiffs have another "spur" if they would properly roll the work. Plaintiffs would not agree to this. He admitted that there was difficulty in obtaining labour in the latter part of 1901, and the early part of 1902. Labour was scarce at that time, and the supply unequal to the demand. He thought plaintiffs did not do their utmost to obtain a sufficient supply of labour; they should have employed a labour agent earlier to collect boys in the Territories. He had heard Cherry say that the boys they got down would not stay. There was an explanation for that. Plaintiffs were paying 3s. 6d. a day, with free quarters. The boys found that the current rate was 4s. 6d. a day, and naturally they would not stay at the reservoir works. Matters came to a head in April and May, because of the small number of men in the contractors' service.

Herbert Rouse, secretary of the Waterworks Committee, was then called. He said Mr. McCorquindale saw him in reference to the labour employed on the works. Everything asked for by Mr. McCorquindale was supplied by witness. The work was a very extensive one, and included the counting of eight wages-books of 300 folios each. There were other labourers besides those shown in the list. These labourers were not included under any head that Mr. McCorquindale asked for, and might be employed on half a dozen other kinds of work. It was impossible to have a return for more than two, three, or four months out of the twenty-seven months prepared by this (Thursday) morning.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Mr. McCorquindale asked him at first for information as to the men employed on excavation, embankment, rubble drain, benching, and clearing up. Afterwards Mr. McCorquindale asked him for information in regard to the men employed on making, mixing, and placing in position of the concrete. He thought the return was incomplete, because there were men employed under other heads of employment than those shown.

Sir H. Juta said that the plaintiffs would be satisfied if Mr. Rouse would take out a return of the total number of men employed on the work in December, 1902; the number of men employed on excavations between March and September, 1904; and the number of cubic yards of excavation carried out to the end of September.

Witness said that he would endeavour to have the details ready by the following morning.

Herbert Roux, secretary of the Board (re-called) said that since the adjournment on Thursday he had searched in order to ascertain whether there had been any estimates before the Board in regard to the construction of a reservoir. He found that there were reports from Mr. Bennett and Mr. Wright dealing with the construction of a reservoir to hold 30,000,000 gallons. Mr. Bennett's estimate was £50,000, and Mr. Wright's £52,000. Witness was not secretary of the Board when the estimates were submitted. The present reservoir was to hold 30,000,000 gallons; he did not know whether it was the reservoir referred to in the reports of Messrs. Bennett and Wright.

Andrew B. Reid, of the firm of A. B. Reid and Co., builders and contractors, said he was a member of the Water Board, and was a member at the time when the contract was proceeding. He had had nearly 24 years' experience of construction work, including 21 years in this colony. The contract had been fixed when he joined the Board; at the first meeting he attended the plaintiffs came to sign the contract. Witness represented the Mowbray Municipality on the Board, having been Mayor of Mowbray two years. He saw the work as it was carried on by the plaintiffs; he formed an opinion in the beginning of 1902 that the work was not being attempted to be pushed forward in a practical way so as to get it finished within the contract time. Witness had considerable experience both of concrete work and excavation, though he had had no experience of the construction of large reservoirs. At the time when the contractors were at work unskilled labour was somewhat scarce; the rate of wages was 4s. 6d., without quarters. Quarters would be equivalent to about 2s. a week. Witness's firm were retarded to a certain extent in the contracts they had on hand at that time owing to the state of the labour market, but they got through without any complaints. He was present at the Board meeting when the contractors applied for an advance to enable them to bring down natives from the Territories. The average price of excavation on the works witness's firm had in hand during that period was 2s. 8d. per cubic yard. That would include 10 per cent. for profit. The plaintiffs' estimate of 1s. 6d. per cubic yards was, he thought, entirely out of the question. The contractors' figure of 41s. per cubic yard for concrete work was, he contended, very much too low. Taking the class of concrete work that the plaintiffs had to do at the reservoir, he thought a fair average price for floors would be about 44s., and walls about 60s., giving an average of about 52s. He regarded the plaintiffs' estimate of 41s. all round for concrete work as too low. He had not had much experience of embankments, but he should take as a fair figure for such work 1s. 6d. per cubic yard. The Board were very reluctant indeed to turn the plaintiffs off the work, but they were compelled to do so in the interests of the ratepayers whom they represented. If the work had been seriously pushed on by the plaintiffs he, as a member of the Board, would have been prepared to grant them an extension of the contract time.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: As to the figures for the excavation, he did not think the cost of the work departmentally, which worked out at 2s. per cubic yard, was excessive. He had quoted his firm's contract prices; he considered that the work which had to be done on the slopes of the mountain at this reservoir was much more difficult than the work his firm had to do. His firm had carried out a good deal of excavation both in Cape Town, Woodstock, on the Groot Schuur Estate, and at Somerset West. Witness's firm had not brought down labourers from the Territories; they had always managed to obtain their native labour locally. In several of their contracts about the period of the plaintiffs' operations, witness's firm completed within the specified time; there were very few contracts in which they had an extension. He would have been willing in April, 1902, to grant the contractors an extension of time, as suggested in the engineer's report, although he thought the plaintiffs had not been proceeding with due despatch. He would have wanted an undertaking that the work would be completed within a reasonable time.

Sir H. Juta (to witness): What fault had you to find with the contractors in April, 1902, when the figures show that in March they had done more work in the way of excavation and embankment than the Board ever did afterwards?

Witness: So they ought to have done—considerably more.

Counsel: Now, I want to know what fault you had to find in April with this work?

Witness: The work was falling off. Men were leaving.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: It was entirely the spirit of the Board that the contractors should be given an extension of time if the work had been proceeding at a reasonable rate.

By the Court: He saw a large number of labourers leaving in April; the explanation was largely because the contractors were not paying the current rate of wages. The contractors were also short of plant. At the time he did not think it was possible, even if all went well, to complete the contract within the specified time.

Mr. Schreiner read the correspondence leading up to the institution of proceedings.

Mr. Wright, the engineer (recalled by Mr. Schreiner), said that on the 20th May, 1901, before the construction, he prepared an estimate of a thirty million gallon reservoir to cost £52,000 by a very rough estimate.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Sir H. Juta, on behalf of the plaintiffs, said that it would be important for the jury in the first instance to carefully consider the position of the two parties in order to get a fair idea of what was done. The plaintiffs had been carrying on large public works in this colony, and they called on the defendants to make inquiry from the Public Works Department as to their character. On the other hand, they had got Mr. Wright, who, whatever his capacity was, had no experience whatsoever in this colony of making reservoir works, with the exception of a little bit of a dam at Steynsburg, that had never been built. The conditions in this country were so extremely different to elsewhere that the most able man from England might make very serious mistakes. Mr. Wright, they would remember, would have them believe that the contract was an absurdity and a farce, and that when he framed his estimate of £52,000 he did not go into figures. While Mr. Wright said the contract could not be finished within 2½ years it was important to note that many able contractors were confident they would finish it in the stipulated time. It would be difficult to say exactly how Mr. Wright approached the work, but from the beginning there were complaints that the engineer did not know anything of the practical part of the work. What would any of the jury say if they undertook certain work, and had to look at the newspapers to find their employers' complaints? Nothing but the accusations of the engineer appeared in the press, and there was never any publication of the plaintiffs' defence. Under such circumstances, could the jury for a moment fancy that the engineer and Cochrane and Cherry were on the best of terms? In March, the plaintiffs by several thousands did more work than the Board had done at any time since. It was hardly likely that Mr. Wright, when he had daggers drawn with the contractors, could in a calm and unbiassed way judge the work of the latter. While Mr. Wright pointed out that the contract could not be finished within the time, and that it would take three and a half years, was it not playing with his principals when he advised them to grant an extension for a couple of months? It was significant, when the contract was taken over, that alterations of an extensive character were proceeded with by the Board. Coming to the question of whether the delay was without "reasonable or sufficient cause," counsel drew the attention of the Court to the contention of the defendants that the opinion of the engineer on this point was final. He submitted that the question divided itself into two parts. The first was whether the ejecting clause (No. 11) was within the arbitrament of the engineer. Then, supposing it were, he should say that a further point arose whether there was any conduct on the part of the defendants which brought about delay. It would be unreasonable to suppose that the engineer should be the arbiter of whether there was any delay on the part of the defendants. The grammatical construction and meaning of the clause constituted an exception, because the words read, "If the contractors shall fail to make such progress with the work, as shall, in the opinion of the engineers, be proportionate to the total time fixed, without reasonable or sufficient cause," etc. The engineer was to decide whether the work was proportionate, but counsel submitted it was not intended that he should determine whether there was a reasonable or insufficient cause.

[Maasdorp, J.: The point arose, though not precisely in this form, in the case of Hills v. the Colonial Government, in connection with the construction of the Klipplaat Railway.]

Sir H. Juta said that the clause was not really identical in the respective contracts. He went on to say that usually, where there was provision made for the engineer to be arbiter, there was also power given to him to extend the contract time. There was nothing in this contract about that. He submitted that the engineer was not to be the sole arbiter under this contract. Counsel cited Hendricks and Socker v. Atkins (13 "Cape Times" Reports, 517), and the English case of Wells v. Army and Navy Co-operative Society (vol. 86, "Law Times," 764).

Counsel contended that if the plaintiffs showed that they were turned off the works without reasonable and sufficient cause, they were excused the delay, and the defendants had not been justified in ejecting the contractors. He next dealt with the evidence as to whether the plaintiffs had employed as much labour on the works as they could have done. He urged that it was not a matter of higher wages that prevented the plaintiffs from obtaining sufficient native labourers, but that the plague scare and martial law regulations were strong contributory causes to any shortage that the plaintiffs had. The plaintiffs, he contended, took all ordinary, energetic precautions to obtain an adequate supply of labour. Now the best test was to compare the work the defendants did with the work done by the plaintiffs. In March, 1902, the engineer complained about the work done by plaintiffs in February. Now what were the facts? Out of twenty-one months, when the defendants were at work, in one month only did they exceed the work done by the plaintiffs in February, 1902. In other months, the defendants approached the plaintiffs' work for that month. The plaintiffs carried out 15,600 cubic yards; the plaintiffs did 14,000 in September, 1902; 10,600 in March, 1903; and 12,000 in April, 1903. As for the rest, the defendants' work ranged from 7,000 down to 2,000 cubic yards in the month. Again, the engineer complained in April, 1902, about the work of the previous month. Again, what about the facts? In excavation and embankment the plaintiffs performed in March, 1902, 29,100 yards, whereas the monthly returns of the work, as done departmentally by the Board, fluctuated from 24,900 in October, 1902, to 4,000 in September, 1903. Counsel compared the cost of the work departmentally to the end of September with the contract price. He asked the jury to find that the plaintiffs should not have been turned out on the ipse dixit of the engineer, who was not on the best of terms with the contractors. He went on to submit that there were other causes for the delay—for instance, the late arrival of the plant through the congestion at the Docks, and the engineer's unnecessary restraint of the contractors from running additional "spurs" to carry away the soil. He submitted that the Municipalities were too hasty, and ought never to have expelled the plaintiffs. In addressing the jury on the question of damages, counsel urged that a sum of £3,000 was a reasonable compensation to be paid to the plaintiffs.

Mr. Schreiner then addressed the jury. At the outset he pointed out that it was not from the defendants that the suggestion of a jury had emanated, because it had seemed to them that the question was very largely one of legal construction. It had not seemed to them to be so much a question for the jury as for his lordship to determine the construction of clause 11. His learned friend, in dealing with this clause, had placed the words "reasonable or sufficient cause" not exactly where they occurred in the clause. The contract said: "If, during the continuance of the contract, the contractors shall, without reasonable or sufficient cause, fail to make such progress with the work as shall, in the opinion of the engineer, be proportionate to the total time fixed for the execution of the work," etc. What followed? Not an arbitration, not a judge and jury, not an independent inquiry; but the clause went on to say that the engineer should, after having given the contractor forty-eight hours' notice, have the power to eject the contractor and his employees from the works. Counsel admitted that the clause was very stringent, but it was, he said, a contract to which Cochrane and Cherry were bound. The clause was not unreasonable in the sense of being unprecedented. It was such a clause as was found in many contracts. It had not been suggested by the plaintiff Mr. Cherry, that there was mala fides on the part of the engineer. He put that question to Mr. Cherry when he went into the box, and very fairly Mr. Cherry said that he did not think that the engineer had acted mala fide. He was sorry that his learned friend had seen fit to paint Mr. Wright such a scoundrel.

Maasdorp, J., put it to counsel whether the proportion of work done could not be determined by the engineer, quite apart from the reasonable or sufficient cause.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the question of the proportion of work done could not be determined by arithmetical methods. He contended that the words "without reasonable or sufficient cause" were the most operative words in this contract, and, as a matter of fact, stood to some extent for the protection of the contractors. He urged that the words quoted could not be dissociated in the interpretation of the clause from the context. He proceeded to contend that all that the clause contemplated was urgency and emergency, not an independent inquiry, not a trial before judge and jury for three or four days.

[Maasdorp, J.: Very well, then; we might as well never have sat here if your contentions be correct.]

Mr. Schreiner said that the point that should come before the jury was the delay occasioned by the non-acting out in time, or at once, of the survey pegs.

[Maasdorp, J.: A question that could be determined in an hour. Is it your contention that that is the only point I should direct the jury upon?]

Mr. Schreiner said that the jury might also be directed on the point of the additional "spurs." He adduced these submissions in all humility to his lordship. He could not but regret that there had been such a long inquiry into questions that were settled when the Board put into operation clause 11. Counsel quoted the case of Roberts v. Bury Commissioners (L.R. 5, Q.P. 310-329). He proceeded to trace the subsequent events, and referred in some detail to the demand of the plaintiffs for an arbitration, and their appointment of an arbitrator. The refusal of the defendants to be joined in the arbitration, and the Board's subsequent application, upon notice of motion, in the Supreme Court for an interdict to restrain the arbitration. This application was granted by Mr. Justice Hopley, not, it was true, for the same reasons as were now brought forward, but upon the same dicta. That judgment had not been appealed against. Continuing, counsel submitted that there had been no wrongful disturbance of the contractors on the part of the Board or their servants. Referring to the evidence of Mr. Wright (the engineer), he submitted that, though Mr. Wright had not fairly grasped the trend of his learned friend's severe cross-examination, he had given his evidence as a honest, honourable, professional man would do. The argument which had been used by his learned friend contained insinuations against Mr. Wright, which, if they were well founded, were such that he should be hounded out, and he would deserve to lose his billet. On a calm day, after the heat of cross-examination, his learned friend descended to this, that he asked the jury to argue, because there had been some friction between Cherry and Wright: "Gentlemen, you are all men of the world, and as men of the world, knowing human nature, of course you know what the engineer would do. Why, he would get them out of the work." Was Mr. Wright such a scoundrel as that? That was an insinuation which he (Mr. Schreiner) thought Mr. Wright did not deserve. Continuing, counsel commented on the fact that Mr. Cochrane, the practical partner of the firm, although he had been in court, had not been put into the box. The plaintiffs had undoubtedly made a mistake. Mr. Cherry came down from the Telegraph Department of the Transvaal, and in his youth and inexperience and enthusiasm though he could make a profit of 10 per cent. He thought the war would be over in September, 1901, and he would be first in the field. He had not anticipated the plague and the martial law regulations, and the prolongation of the war until May, 1902. Counsel submitted that the jury could not find that there had been any breach of contract for which the Waterworks Board could be held responsible. How could Cochrane and Cherry complain, when they did not provide themselves with anything like the means necessary to carry out a £71,000 contract? They took the risks, and they could not come and complain now because they had been ejected.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, said that in regard to the point of law—

[Maasdorp, J.: I don't think you need argue the law. Sir Henry; if I am wrong, it can be set right hereafter.]

Sir H. Juta: Very well, my lord. Proceeding, counsel said that his learned friend had made his remarks about the engineer infinitely worse than anything he (Sir Henry) had said. He certainly never called Mr. Wright a "scoundrel," or intended to insinuate that he was a scoundrel. The point was that either Mr. Wright did his duty to the Board at the time or his memory had failed him. It was ungenerous of his learned friend to say that all these things came from him (Sir Henry), and nothing came from the contractors. The correspondence showed that the contractors repeatedly complained about the treatment they received from Mr. Wright. They all knew that if there was friction the weaker man went to the wall. That was human nature; it did not make that man a scoundrel at all.

Maasdorp, J., said that he had to decide the point whether it was in the discretion of the engineer to decide whether a proportionate amount of the work had been done, and also whether there was reasonable and sufficient cause for the failure to do that work. The defendants said that the engineer had to dispose of both these questions, and it made all the difference to the issues that the jury had to consider whether that was so, or whether the question was still open as to the reasonable and sufficient character of the cause of the failure. He (the learned Judge) found, as a question of law, that it was not in the discretion of the engineer to decide the point as to whether there was reasonable and sufficient cause to bring about the failure to do work. It seemed to him that, taking the grammatical construction of this clause, the only thing that the engineer had to do was to find whether such progress had been made in the work "as shall, in his opinion, be proportionate to the total time fixed for the execution of the contract." He had to decide that question in this way. He said that one-half of the time had elapsed, and only one-seventh of the work had been done. He thought the question of whether there was a sufficient reasonable cause was a question that the jury had to decide. That was his direction to the jury on the point of law. The main question for the jury to decide was: Had the plaintiffs shown to them what they claimed to be the position at the time, that there was reasonable and sufficient cause for their having failed to do the necessary proportion of the work. His lordship went on to review the evidence at some length.

The jury, after an absence of twenty-five minutes, returned into court with a verdict for the plaintiffs. They found that the plaintiffs were entitled to £1,217 13s. 9d. retention money, less an advance of £227 12s. 3d., leaving a net amount of £929 1s. 6d.; to £1,600 for cement, £2,500 for machinery, and £2,500 damages for retention, and loss of profit.

Sir H. Juta moved for judgment for the plaintiffs for £7,520 1s. 6d., in terms of the jury's finding.

Mr. Schreiner moved for a stay of execution under the Jury Act, on the ground that the defendants were entirely dissatisfied, with the result. There should, he said, be an adjournment of the entering of judgment to enable the defendants to consider their position.

Sir H. Juta said he did not see that it would make any difference whether the entering of judgment was adjourned or not.

Counsel having been heard further,

His Lordship said that judgment would be entered for the plaintiffs for £7,520 1s. 6d., with costs. He would make a note of the opposition of the defendants.

Mr. Schreiner applied for a stay of execution. He mentioned that it was probable there would be an application for a new trial, but that was not the ground on which he now asked for stay of execution.

His Lordship said that the Court would grant a stay of execution until the 15th November.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton. Defendants': Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

LENNOX V. MURRAY AND { 1904.
STEWART. { Oct. 25th.

Mr. Gardiner, who appeared for the defendant, asked to have judgment signed in terms of a consent paper put in.

Judgment entered accordingly.

RAPHAEL V. MAY.

Mr. Gardiner, who appeared in this case, said he and Sir Henry Juta, who were engaged for the defendants in this case, were also engaged in the jury trial in the court below. They had no idea that the case would have come on so soon; if they had, they would have made other arrangements. He asked to have the hearing of the case postponed.

Dr. Greer, who appeared for the plaintiff, said that, in view of Mr. Gardiner's explanation, he could not oppose the application, but he would ask for costs, as all his witnesses were present, some of whom had come from Somerset Strand and others from the Paarl.

Mr. Gardiner said he would leave that matter in the hands of the Court.

His Lordship said that he did not see that he could do anything but grant costs. The case would be allowed to stand over sine die.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HAMILTON MAXWELL FLEMING, IN HIS CAPACITY AS LIQUIDATOR OF THE BUFFALO COLD STORAGE CO.

Mr. Close applied for an order restraining the National Bank from delivering to either Alexander or Maurice Bergl 15,000 shares in the Federal Cold Storage Co., Ltd., pending the institution by petitioner of an action to recover same. Plaintiff sued in his capacity as one of the joint liquidators of the Buffalo Cold Storage Co., in liquidation. The company's business was acquired by the Federal Company in 1902, and the shares in question were said to have been deposited in the National Bank by the respondent Maurice Bergl.

His Lordship granted the application; the action to be instituted forthwith, and the respondents to have leave to anticipate the return day.

MAYNARD V. MAYNARD.

This was an action brought by John Lucius Maynard, of Sea Point, against his wife, for an order for the restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, on the ground of desertion.

Mr. Sylvester Williams, who appeared for plaintiff, said the defendant had written declining to defend the action.

William Thos. Birch produced the certificate of the marriage.

The plaintiff stated he resided at Sea Point, and was an overseer by occupation. He was married to defendant on the 24th June, 1901. For the first two years of their married life they were happy, but after that they had family quarrels. He had to complain of her going out without his permission in his absence. She continually deceived him as to her movements. He also had to complain of her lending money to her family, without acquainting him of the fact. In August last he found her wearing a bangle. He questioned her as to who gave it to her, but she made no answer. He also found letters addressed to her from other men. He questioned her about them, and she tore them up and left him in August last.

To the Court: He never ill-treated her. The defendant was a fairly well-educated woman. She wrote to witness and told him she would not defend the case. They were married in community of property.

The Court ordered that the defendant return to plaintiff on or before December 31, failing which, a decree of divorce would be granted on January 12.

Postea (January 12, 1905). The rule was made absolute.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PRICE AND CO. V. WEBNER. { 1904.
Oct. 26th.

Promoter of company—Novation.

The defendant, who at the time was promoting a limited liability Company, bought certain goods from the plaintiff for the use of the intended Company, but he bought the goods in his own name, and the plaintiff debited the defendant in his books with the price. The Company was afterwards formed, and the plaintiff on one occasion sent an account for payment to the Company, but on another occasion the defendant gave him his own cheque in part payment.

Held, that the mere sending of the account by the plaintiff to the Company did not constitute a novation or release the defendant from his liability.

This was an action brought by Messrs. E. J. Price and Co., upholsterers, Strand-street, to recover from J. F. Webner, of Mouille Point, £240, less £100 paid on account, for goods sold and delivered.

The matter had already been before the Court on an argument on exception. (See 14 C.T.R., 630).

The plaintiff, in his declaration, stated that he carried on business as an upholsterer and furniture dealer at Strand-street, Cape Town. On or about July, 1903, he supplied defendant with certain articles of furniture and fixtures, amounting to £240 13s. 2d., of which defendant paid £100 on account, but had refused to pay the balance.

When the case was last before the Court the defendant denied having made any payments, but he now wished to amend his plea. The original plea denied severally each of the allegations of the declaration save those which were purely formal.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander for the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan explained that when the case was last before the Court the defendant denied having made any payments, but he now wished to amend his plea.

Mr. Alexander explained that the difficulty in this matter had arisen through all the papers of the Dr. Grosz Medical Bath Co. being in the hands of the liquidators. Since they had seen the documents it had come to the notice of the attorneys that the sum of £50 had been paid to the plaintiff by the defendant. At the time the plea was filed they were under the impression that nothing had been paid, but they were since informed that two sums of £25 each had been paid.

Edmund J. Price, the plaintiff, stated he carried on business as E. J. Price and Co., Strand-street, Cape Town. Witness had known the defendant for a number of years. In April, 1903, defendant approached him about furnishing and decorating a house. Witness accompanied him to the house, which was situate at Mouille Point. Witness prepared an estimate for doing the necessary work, and defendant accepted it. Witness confirmed the contract by letter, and proceeded to execute it. The estimate was for soft goods. The majority of them were forwarded by means of a carrier, and the rest by a messenger. When the estimate had been accepted the defendant said he was starting a medical company. Witness asked him if he wanted him (witness) to take shares in it, and he replied in the negative, and said he would pay cash when the contract was completed. Subsequently the defendant purchased a drawing-room suite from witness, which was delivered. He also purchased eight mattresses. Witness debited defendant with everything purchased. When the contracts had been completed witness asked defendant for some money on account, and he gave him a cheque for £50. The defendant never told witness that he had purchased the things on behalf of the "Dr. Grosz Medical Baths." The defendant was credited with the amount received, as the block of the receipt book would show. Witness asked him on several occasions for payment, and he promised to pay, but said he was rather short of cash. Witness wrote to the managers of the "Dr. Grosz Medical Baths" asking for payment. The defendant paid witness another £25 on account in September. [De Villiers, C.J.: Where's the receipt for the £50 cheque?]

Mr. Alexander: We have the secretary of the company here, who will prove that he paid the £50 on behalf of the company.

Witness: I gave a receipt to Mr. Webner, as the block of the receipt book will show.

Continuing, witness said that as he could not get payment from Webner he placed the matter in the hands of the South African Trades Protection

Society, and they applied to both Webner and the Grosz Medical Baths. They applied to the latter without his authority. He received a cheque for £25, for which Mrs. Price gave the receipt produced. The goods were all supplied in accordance with the terms of the contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness had no dealings with Dr. Grosz's Medical Baths. Witness did not personally send any accounts to the Medical Baths; his accountant may have done so. Witness gave the Protection Society the particulars of the amount to claim. He may have authorised them to claim from "The Dr. Grosz Medical Baths," but he doubted it. Witness had no dealings with Dr. Grosz. The defendant and the Baths Company had their offices together. Witness often went to the office to ask for a cheque.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you ever see the Medical Baths?]

I did.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose you never used them?]

No, my lord.

De Villiers, C.J., said the question the Court had to decide was who the goods were sold to.

Mr. Alexander said they were for the company.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was the company incorporated then?]

No, my lord; but it was being formed, and in that state, of course, certain liabilities would be undertaken in furnishing, etc.

John Thomas Williams, assistant in plaintiff's firm, stated he recollected the transaction in April with the defendant. Witness carried out the order, and debited defendant with the amount. Witness heard nothing of the "Dr. Grosz Medical Baths" until very lately. Witness was also present when the drawing-room suite was purchased.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness never heard of Dr. Grosz until lately.

Mrs. Wilhelmina Price, wife of plaintiff, stated that at the time the contract was entered into with Webner she kept the books. The first time she saw him was when he purchased the drawing-room suite. The defendant did not pay her the £25 personally, but she made out a receipt for the amount received. He then said there would be another cheque shortly.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness seldom or never spoke to gentleman customers.

Re-examined: Witness sent out accounts from month to month. She always submitted the accounts to somebody else before posting them.

A messenger in the employment of the plaintiff's firm stated he took the goods to the house at Mouille Point. Dr. Grosz received them.

John Hector Gibb stated his firm acted as carriers for plaintiff. Witness took a number of the parcels himself. They were all addressed to Mr. Webner.

Cross-examined: Witness never saw either the defendant or Dr. Grosz there.

Thomson Mlella stated he was employed by the plaintiff firm. He took goods for them to Mr. Webner. They were addressed to him. He handed the goods to some carpenters, who were working there.

P. J. Messcheart, ledger clerk, in the Netherlands Bank, stated Mr. Webner had an account there. The cheques produced were debited to him.

For the defence,

Isidore Frederick Webner, the defendant, was called, and stated he promised plaintiff to introduce him to a man who was floating a company, and who would give him a good order. He subsequently introduced Dr. Grosz, who gave all orders for the goods. The company did business long before it was registered in July. The delay in registering the company was due to the resignation of two directors. Witness never received any account for the goods. Witness had nothing to do with the payment of £50. He only heard about that since. Witness admitted making two payments of £25 each, because Mr. Price was pressing for money, and witness paid him on behalf of the company, the secretary of which promised repayment. Witness had on various occasions lent the company sums amounting to £700, and had otherwise assisted Dr. Grosz, who could not speak English very well.

Cross-examined: Witness had purchased goods from other dealers, who understood they were for the company, and not for witness himself. He understood that Mr. Price, who was a personal friend of his, knew that too.

Frederick McDonnell, secretary of the Dr. Grosz Medical Baths Company, Ltd., said the goods purchased from the plaintiff were all debited to the company in the company's books. Mr. Price must have understood they were for the company, which had never repudiated its liability. Witness had paid plaintiff £50 on account.

Cross-examined: Mr. Webner financed the company to a certain extent. Mr. Price never asked for Dr. Grosz when he called at the office.

J. H. Little, chief clerk, of the South African Protection Company, said he received orders from Mr. Price to press the Dr. Grosz Company for payment of the account.

Cross-examined: Mrs. Price subsequently told him that they knew nothing about the company, and only recognised Mr. Webner as liable for the amount due.

Hendrick Moller stated he was clerk in the offices of the liquidators of the Dr. Grosz Medical Bath Co., Ltd., and produced the books of the latter firm.

The firm debited itself with £240 worth of furniture, and credited itself with two items of £50 each, cash paid on account. From the books, it appeared that various sums of money were loaned by Mr. Webner to the company. The furniture was included in the assets of the company.

Cross-examined: The books produced were in the same condition as they had been received from the company. They had not been newly written up. The defendant had paid various accounts on behalf of the company.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing you were called upon to pay this debt, could you?] I don't know that.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why, are you not liquidator?]

No, I am in the liquidator's office.

Counsel then entered into argument on the facts, after which His Lordship inquired if the defendant disputed the accuracy of the account, if judgment was given against him.

Mr. Alexander said there were a few slight discrepancies, which brought the amount of the claim down by £7 10s.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was not seriously denied in this case that the articles alleged to have been supplied to the defendant were supplied, except £7 10s. worth. The real question in dispute between the parties was whether credit was given at the time, when the goods were ordered, to the defendant Webner, or to a company which was intended to be formed, and to be called the "Dr. Grosz Medical Bath Company." The evidence showed that at the time the goods were ordered, certain communications did take place between the defendant and the plaintiff. On the 21st April, the plaintiff handed an estimate of the goods which would be delivered, and the letter containing that estimate was addressed, not to the company, but to "J. F. Webner, Esq., Savings Bank Buildings, Cape Town." It was clear that at that time it was intended to establish this company, and that within a couple of days after a secretary was appointed who wrote letters to different parties on behalf of the company. The letters referred chiefly to advertisements, which the promoters of the company wished to have inserted in the newspapers, and it was quite clear from the evidence of the secretary that the moving spirit of the whole matter was the defendant. In his evidence, the defendant wished the Court to believe that he acted merely as a friend of Dr. Grosz's, as Dr. Grosz could not speak English properly, and that he interpreted for him. The evidence, however, showed that he was not a mere interpreter; on the contrary, he was the moving spirit of the company. He obtained the option of the property at Mouille Point to be used by this company, and he sold his right to the option at a considerable profit. He

(his lordship) did not blame him for that. He gave £3,000 for the property, and sold it for £3,500 and £2,500 worth of shares in the company. The secretary pro tem. of the company stated that, when writing any letters, he took his instructions from the defendant. In one of the letters, where the Midland Printing and Publishing Company refused to accept their advertisement, the secretary referred them as to their respectability to Mr. Webner. The facts showed that the defendant was not acting merely as a friend of Dr. Grosz, but that he was an active promoter of the company. Now, if it had been intended at that time that the plaintiff should look for his money to the company alone, the secretary would have communicated with the plaintiff, and it would have been made clear that the person to whom plaintiff was to look would be the company to be formed. It would require a good deal to persuade the Court to believe that the plaintiff would have given credit to a non-existing company. Supposing the company had never been formed, whom would the plaintiff look to for his money? The defendant, in reply to that question, said, "Oh, to Dr. Grosz." But why to Dr. Grosz? He (his lordship) could not see why he should be applied to. Both defendant and Dr. Grosz seemed to have stood on very similar footing. There seemed to be no reason advanced why Dr. Grosz would be more liable than the defendant. The plaintiff's statement was that the defendant himself went to the shop and ordered the things for himself, and this statement was corroborated by the estimate which was given to him at the time, and then there was the further fact that the goods were supplied at the house, which was the property of the defendant. No doubt the defendant was entitled to rely on the fact that in September the account was made out in the name of the "Dr. Grosz Medical Baths Co.," but the sending of such an account did not amount to a substitution of the company for the defendant as debtor to the plaintiff. There was no novation of the debt and the mistake was probably caused by the plaintiff having received a cheque signed by the "Dr. Grosz Medical Baths Company." The plaintiff had supplied the goods, and wanted to have his account settled. It did not matter to him who paid it. The mere fact of the acceptance by the plaintiff of a cheque from the Baths Company did not make him accept the company as debtors. For those reasons he was of opinion that judgment should be for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, less £7 10s., with costs, and also costs of the exception.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Silberhaur, Wahl and Fuller; Defendants' Attorney: F. B. Andrews.]

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

RHODES V. RHODES AND { 1904.
BOWMAN. { Oct. 27th.

Mr. P. Jones applied, on behalf of the plaintiff, who was taking divorce proceedings against the defendant, and claiming damages from the co-defendant, for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of the captain, surgeon, steward, and stewardess of the S.S. Turakina, which was expected to arrive in Table Bay en route from New Zealand to England on the 29th inst.

The application was granted on the understanding that if the evidence was objected to by defendants the evidence would be of no avail. Mr. Giddy, K.C., was appointed commissioner.

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. Roux applied for the admission of Owen Balleine Payn as an attorney.

The application was granted.

Mr. Burton applied for the admission of Alexander Gromer as an interpreter.

The application was granted.

Mr. Alexander applied for the admission of Louis Moss Cohen as an attorney and notary public.

The application was granted, the oath to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court, at Kimberley.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SCOTT V. STABCK. { 1904.
{ Oct. 27th.

Mr. P. Jones applied for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

The provisional order was granted on the 19th October.

Hopley, J., asked what service had been made on the defendant.

Mr. Jones replied that he could not say.

Hopley, J., said that the service of every summons ought to be briefed to counsel in every instance. That was an absolute rule in the High Court of Griqualand West. How was he to know whether the defendant knew anything of the proceedings, when there was no proof that he had been served with a summons? He did not know how young attorneys' clerks were learning their business. Was it too much trouble to send one round to the Registry to find out the nature of the service?

The application was granted, His Lordship instructing counsel to ascertain the nature of the service.

GORDON MITCHELL AND CO. V. TURNER.

Mr. Sutton applied for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on October 22.

The application was granted.

VAN BRED A V. TURK.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,600, with interest at 6 per cent., from July, 1904, and also that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

The application was granted.

ROBINSKY AND CO. V. NORTON.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100.

The application was granted.

FLETCHER V. VIVIERS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £442, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from 31st July, 1903.

The application was granted.

ESTATE AURET V. LEVITAN.

Mr. P. Jones applied for judgment on certain conditions of sale for £215, together with interest at 6 per cent. from February 13, 1903.

The application was granted.

STEPHAN V. MYBURGH.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on September 17. He could not say what service was effected, but he knew the summons was served, as the defendant had asked for a postponement of the case.

Granted.

SPENGLER V. AIMIAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for a sum of £24, being six months' interest, due on a certain mortgage bond.

The application was granted.

GREENBERG AND CO. V. LEWIS.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £6, and also for £20, under Rule 329d. He asked to have the application for judgment on the promissory note allowed to stand over, as the certificate of presentation had not come to hand, but asked for provisional sentence, under Rule 329d, on the other claim.

[Hopley, J.: Why not postpone the whole case until this day week?]

I am instructed to apply for provisional sentence in the one case.

[Hopley, J.: You can take judgment in the one case and apply again next week in the other, but two lots of costs will not be allowed.]

Under the circumstances, I will allow the whole case to stand over until next Thursday.

WESSELS V. FERREIRA.

Mr. De Waal applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, together with interest at 6 per cent. from June, 1903, and also that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

The application was granted.

SMITH AND ANOTHER V. ELBURG.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, less £100 paid on account, together with interest at 6 per cent. from January 1, 1904.

The application was granted.

LOMBARD V. ESTATE CLARK.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of defendant's estate. Letters of administration had been granted to defendants. The provisional order was granted on October 8.

The application was granted.

Mr. Benjamin applied on behalf of several creditors for the appointment of a provisional trustee. The applicants were creditors to the extent of £36,300.

Hopley, J., inquired if the value of the property would deteriorate if the application had to stand over.

Mr. Benjamin said he understood it would. He read the application of the petitioners, who suggested Mr. G. W. Steytler as a fit and proper person.

The application was granted; Mr. Steytler to be appointed, with powers to do the various duties.

MAXWELL AND EARP V. LEWIS.

Mr. Lewis applied for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

The provisional order was granted on October 22.

The defendant appeared, and said he did not see why the order should be granted.

Hopley, J., said apparently the defendant had committed some insolvent act, or the application would not be made.

The defendant said he would not be able to earn anything if he was made insolvent.

Hopley, J., said that perhaps the best thing the defendant could do would be to go insolvent.

Defendant said he was willing to pay something off monthly.

[Hopley, J.: You should have gone to your creditors, and said that. I am afraid I cannot help you. If you incur debts and cannot pay them, you must be declared insolvent.]

The application was granted.

WOOD, WILLIAMS AND CO. V. DUGGAN.

Mr. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £266.

The application was granted.

TUCKER V. TANNER.

Mr. Sutton applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest at 6 per cent. from the 9th September, 1903, and also that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

The application was granted.

LAWRENCE AND CO. AND ANOTHER V. SMYTHE AND CO.

Mr. Russell applied for the final adjudication of defendants' estate. The provisional order was granted on October 22.

The application was granted.

SMITH V. MARTIN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Magistrate's Court awarding plaintiff £20, together with £2 14s. taxed costs, and that certain landed property be declared executable. There was already a return of nulla bona with regard to the movable goods.

The application was granted.

COUCH V. MARTIN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Magistrate's Court awarding plaintiff £69, together with £14 taxed costs.

The application was granted.

ESTATE MARSH V. CLEWS.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,500, together with interest at 6 per cent. from August, 1902, also that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

The application was granted.

HANAU V. STERNER.

Mr. Du Toit moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, together with interest from August, 1903, also that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

The application was granted.

GABLICK, JAGGER AND OTHERS V. ALBERT.

Mr. Bisset applied for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Defendant said he had done his best to get in funds to meet his liabilities, but had been unsuccessful.

Hopley, J., advised the defendant to become insolvent. There was no good rushing against such a strong stream.

The application was granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

LISSACK AND CO. V. CART- (1904, WRIGHT.) Oct. 27th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, on a sum of £37 7s. 9d., amount due for goods sold and delivered.

The application was granted.

ESTATE CLEAR V. LONSDALE.

Mr. Struben applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £45, being nine months' rent due to October 6.

Defendant was barred from pleading.

Defendant appeared, and said that before the proceedings started he offered plaintiffs two-thirds of the money owing, and made arrangements for paying off the balance. The clerk accepted it provisionally, but the plaintiffs wrote declining to accept it.

Hopley, J., said the case was certainly a hard one, but he had to grant sentence.

MAISEL BROS. AND CO. V. CLINGMAN AND BERNSTEIN.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the defendants, and applied to have judgment signed against plaintiffs for not proceeding with this action within the time stipulated by the Rules of Court.

Judgment for defendants in the action, with costs, was granted.

KRUGER V. FACSHE AND CO.

Mr. D. Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £60, being rent due for twelve months.

The application was granted.

TRUTER V. SMIT.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for a sum of £465, being money paid by plaintiff on behalf of defendant.

The application was granted.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS OF JAMES AND MARTIN KENNEDY.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, as a matter of urgency, that the Court allow this matter to be re-opened. On last motion day, a provisional trustee was appointed in the estate of James and Martin Kennedy, and later on in the day another trustee was appointed. He now applied to have the case re-opened, and that both applications be then considered on their merits.

Hopley, J., said he thought it would be rather unprecedented for him to re-open this case, and set aside a decision of the Chief Justice on the meagre details before him. He advised counsel to make application to the Chief Justice when he was next on the bench. He would have to refuse the application.

WATSON AND CO. V. JONES.

Mr. Burton, who appeared for the defendant, moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of the defendant and her witnesses in the above case, which is set down for hearing on November 4. The applicant made an affidavit in which she stated that she was a hotel proprietress at Vryburg, and if her evidence was taken on commission, it would save her considerable expense and inconvenience.

Mr. Van Zyl, who opposed the motion, read affidavits made by the attorneys in charge of the case, stating that if the Court granted the application, it would necessitate the postponing of the case to next term.

Hopley, J., said he thought it would be better for Mrs. Jones to make the trip to Cape Town. It would probably do her good, and, besides, there was not much time to get necessary particulars from her.

The application was refused, with costs.

Ex parte KLEIN.

Mr. Buchanan asked to be allowed to mention this matter, as a matter of urgency. The matter had been before the Chief Justice in the shape of an application for leave to transfer certain property from applicant to her son. The Chief Justice had adjourned the case to ascertain how the applicant intended to secure the money for the benefit of the children. She intended to secure their interest by means of a mortgage.

Hopley, J., said he would mention the matter to the Chief Justice.

ELLIOT BROS. V. BARTLETT.

Mr. Jones, who appeared for the applicant in this case, said there were two other motions on the list concerning the same case, and he thought it would be as well to take the three collectively. He appeared for Elliot Bros. in each case.

Mr. Russell appeared for the Bartletts in each case. Mr. Jones said he thought that if the third motion, which was an application to hypothecate certain property, made by Sarah Anne Bartlett, was considered first, it might shorten matters considerably.

This course was agreed to.

Mr. Jones explained that Elliot Bros. got a rule nisi from the Chief Justice to sell a certain interest, which was a usufructuary interest, and also to sell the interest of one Percival Douglass Bartlett, a major son of Sarah Anne Bartlett, in two farms, whatever it might be, and which comprised portion of the community between Sarah Anne Bartlett and her late husband. The rights of the mother and son had to be determined according to the terms of the will. The rule nisi against Percy Bartlett was made absolute, and under that rule his rights were sold. The mother's matter was ordered to stand over until October 15, and it now came before the Court. So far as concerned the sale of Percy Douglass Bartlett's interest, he now brought an application before the Court to set aside that sale, shortly, on the grounds that the Rules of Court which provided for the sale of immovable property had not been complied with, and that the sale was in other respects wholly irregular.

Mr. Russell said that Sarah Anne Bartlett, with her children, inherited two farms, Angledale and The Plains, which were let at the yearly rent of £300. She had got into financial trouble through signing promissory notes for her son, Percy Douglass Bartlett. If the Court granted leave to have her rights attached, she would have nothing to live on, as the rents from the farms was all she had to subsist upon. She believed that if she got authority to mortgage the farms for the sum of £2,500, she would be able to pay off her liabilities. If she lost possession of her farms she would be penniless. The value of the property would appear to be £6,000, as it brought in a rental of £300 per annum.

Hopley, J., said that the applicant would be allowed to mortgage the properties for £2,500, but the exact terms as to how the amount would be raised, applied, and the interests of the minors, would be embodied in terms to be thought out by parties on each side, when the order would be confirmed by Court, and suspended for three months, in order to give the applicant time to raise the money, the other matters to stand over.

CROSBIE V. ESTATE CROSBIE.

Mr. Joubert moved for the appointment of a commissioner to take the evidence of Mr. Hutton, an important witness in the case.

Granted. Mr. Van Zyl to act as commissioner; costs to stand over.

Ex parte FULLER.

Mr. Uppington moved for leave to the applicant to sell certain properties in the estate of her late husband at Stutterheim for £2,000, and to invest the money as first mortgage at 6 per cent.

Order granted.

GUTHRIE V. MILLER AND CHIAT.

This was an application by Francis Alexander Charles Guthrie, the curator bonis in the estate of J. Jacobs and Co., to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the respondents from disposing of stock in a shop near Caledon, formerly belonging to one J. Traswiski, who traded as Jacobs and Co. The respondents purchased the shop and stock from Traswiski, and the petitioner alleged there was a conspiracy between him and the respondents to defraud the creditors of Jacobs and Co. Traswiski had since been committed for stealing assets in the estate.

Mr. Uppington was for the applicant, and Mr. Burton for the respondent.

Mr. Burton read the affidavit of the respondents, which set out that Traswiski concealed the fact that he had assigned his estate, and they denied the existence of any conspiracy.

Hopley, J., said he could not help thinking that the circumstances of the proceedings were highly suspicious, and if there was any foundation for the allegation made on behalf of the applicant, it would be exceedingly dangerous to trust people who were capable of such a bold stroke as alleged against the respondent. Traswiski, on his own admission, was a very dishonest man, and it seemed he got hold of a lot of money in a very dishonest fashion. He felt at this stage it would be unsafe to allow Miller and Chiat to have anything to do with the realisation of the assets in the estate. The balance of convenience, he thought, lay in making the rule absolute. The interdict would be confirmed, and be suspended on the respondents finding security to the satisfaction of the Resident Magistrate of Caledon for £500, the applicant to proceed with the action on the appointment of a trustee, costs to be costs in the cause.

PEACOCKE, BULUS AND FARQUHARSON
V. BAILEY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to take the evidence of James Ray, a material witness in the case, on commission in England.

Mr. D. Buchanan (for the other side) offered no objection.

Leave granted. Mr. Mackarness to act as commissioner.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

BUTLER V. BUTLER. { 1904.
 { Oct. 28th.

In this action Alfred Paterson Butler, of Hex River, sought an order against his wife, Jessie Maud Paterson, for the restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, on the grounds of desertion.

Mr. Gutsche appeared for the plaintiff.

The defendant was in default.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that he was domiciled at Hex River, and the defendant was domiciled in Chicago, U.S.A. Plaintiff and defendant were married at London in 1886 out of community of property. There was issue of the marriage, one child. In the month of November, 1897, defendant deserted plaintiff, and had refused to return to him.

The plaintiff stated he was married to defendant in London in 1886. In 1894 they came to South Africa, and they went to Johannesburg in 1897. Defendant's mother being ill, witness advised her to go Home. He corresponded with her every mail. In March, 1898, he received a letter from her stating that she did not think he would be much surprised to hear that she had gone away with Jack. She did not wish to make any excuses, but she wished to state that she did not think it was half so immoral to live with a man she loved, as to stay on after marriage with a man after the love was gone, simply because they had been through the marriage ceremony.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it was unnecessary for counsel to proceed further with the letter.

Mr. Gutsche: It is all in the same strain.

In reply to His Lordship, witness said he was willing to take the defendant back. He still corresponded with his daughter.

De Villiers, C.J., granted a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, the defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th December, failing which, to show cause on the 12th March why a decree of divorce should not be granted. The rule to be served on defendant personally, six weeks before the return day.

Postea (March 14, 1905) the rule was made absolute.

LEVENSON V. VURICK.

Principal and agent—Onus of proving agency.

This was an action in which Lipman Levenson, of Prince Albert, sought to recover from Isaac Vurick, of Oudtshoorn, the sum of £225, money paid by plaintiff on behalf of defendant.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that he was an auctioneer and produce dealer, residing at Prince Albert, and the defendant was a general dealer, residing at Oudtshoorn. In or about August, 1903, the defendant, through his agent, Max Levenson, authorised plaintiff to purchase and store for him eleven leaguers of brandy at £17 10s. per leaguer. Plaintiff received the brandy, and paid £192 10s. for it, and also £33 for the twenty-two hogsheads. The defendant asked plaintiff to store the brandy at Prince Albert for his account, and he got a store at Prince Albert at the rate of £1 a month. Plaintiff had not since received instructions as to the disposal of the brandy. He was prepared to deliver the brandy to the defendant on the receipt of the amount of his claim.

Defendant's plea denied that the brandy had been purchased on his behalf. He admitted that he wired to plaintiff, asking if there was any brandy to be purchased in Prince Albert, but nothing further transpired between them.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Alexander) appeared for the defendant.

Max Levenson stated he was an auctioneer carrying on business at Oudtshoorn. He was brother to plaintiff, and brother-in-law to defendant. Formerly he resided at Prince Albert. Early in 1903 the defendant was dealing in brandy in the Oudtshoorn district, and asked witness if there was any brandy to be obtained in Prince Albert. Witness said he did not know, and defendant asked him to telegraph to his brother at Prince Albert.

Mr. Burton said the telegrams in question had been destroyed by the Post Office authorities, and the copies kept by witness had been destroyed by a fire which took place in witness's store.

Witness said the telegrams his brother sent to him had been mislaid.

Mr. McGregor said he did not acknowledge the receipt of any telegrams.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You had better prove that the telegrams have been destroyed.]

Alexander Mann, principal clerk in the Telegraph Office at Cape Town, said application had been made to him for the delivery of certain telegrams which passed between plaintiff and his brother in August, September, and October, 1903, but it was impossible to produce them, as all the telegraph forms for 1903 had been destroyed.

To Mr. McGregor: They are destroyed after six months.

Mr. Burton said there was the question of the telegrams being destroyed by fire, and he would call the plaintiff.

Libman Levenson, the plaintiff, stated he at present resided at Prince Albert. He had a business there as produce dealer. The telegrams he had received from his brother were burned in a fire in his store last August. In August, 1903, he got a telegram from his brother, asking him to try and purchase brandy in Prince Albert. Witness made inquiries, and telegraphed to his brother that Mr. Martinus de Witt had brandy to sell at £18 per leaguer. There were eleven leaguers. Witness's brother accepted the offer, and went to Prince Albert and went to the farm. On his return from the farm he told witness that he had purchased the brandy at £17 10s., and it was to be delivered at witness's store, and that witness was to pay De Witt if he wanted money, and that the defendant would settle with him. The brandy was delivered in August, and De Witt asked if the money had arrived. Witness replied in the negative, and eventually paid De Witt. He had not paid in full, but De Witt had a "good for" for the balance. A little later witness got a wire saying, "Hold brandy for instructions." Witness then hired a store at £1 a month, from a man named De Vries, and stored the brandy there. Witness had not yet paid De Vries. Not receiving any further instructions, witness wrote to his brother asking him what he was to do with the brandy, but received no reply. Witness saw the defendant in March, 1904, and asked him what he intended to do with the brandy, but the defendant did not answer him. Witness, on his return to Prince Albert, wrote to defendant expressing surprise at not receiving the money due, and asking for a settlement, without fail. Witness received a reply from defendant's solicitor, repudiating the whole matter. Witness did not care to press defendant for payment, as he was a member of the family. Witness could not give the Court any particulars about the price of brandy in August and the following months. Witness had no licence to deal in liquor.

Cross-examined: Witness purchased brandy for Prince. Vincent and Co. in 1892, but none in 1893. Witness had only a general merchandise licence in 1893. Witness's brother had no interest in plaintiff's business. He worked for witness as a clerk, at £10 a month and his board. Witness denied that the defendant had wired him directly witness began to take proceedings against defendant, about last June. He could not give any reason for not handing the papers over to his attorney then. Witness did this work gratis, as the defendant was marrying his brother's sister-in-law. Witness did not buy the hogsheads, his brother did so. If witness did not get the money from his brother-in-law, he did not know what he would do.

By De Villiers, C.J.: Witness did not apply to the defendant during the period before March, because he relied on his brother to see the amount due being paid.

Max Levenson (recalled) said his brother undertook to ascertain if there was any brandy to be obtained. He wired next day, saying De Witt had eleven leaguers, at £18 per leaguer. Witness showed Nurick the telegram, and he told witness to sample it, and if it was good to purchase it. Witness asked Nurick for a cheque for the amount due, and he said he would not pay until the brandy was delivered. Witness proceeded to Prince Albert and purchased eleven leaguers at £17 10s. per leaguer, and told him to deliver it at his brother's store. Witness pressed defendant for payment of the amount due. He met him a couple of days before his marriage, and asked him to pay the amount due, and he said he would not. Witness advised his brother not to press Nurick, as he believed he would pay. Witness had not a liquor licence. The value of brandy fell considerably after August, owing to the Exise proposals.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the price of brandy now?]

Witness: I cannot say the exact price, but it is very low.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I thought the new Excise would raise it!]

I don't know, my lord. From what I can hear amongst the farmers, it is very low.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I remember reading a statement in the newspapers to the effect that the price of brandy was increasing.]

Mr. Burton: The £100,000 bonus by the Government was supposed to do that. Whether it will do it or not, we will see.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Witness said he received no commission from his brother-in-law for purchasing the brandy. Witness went to Prince Albert because he had a number of live-stock there. Witness had endeavoured to settle the case. He did not tell the defendant that he was responsible for the whole thing.

Martinus Andries de Witt, a farmer, residing in the Prince Albert district, stated that plaintiff made inquiries in August or September of last year as to whether he had any brandy for sale. Plaintiff's brother went to the farm a couple of days after, and brought eleven leaguers of brandy and 22 hogshhead casks at £17 10s. for the brandy, and 30s. each for the hogshheads. He told witness he was purchasing the brandy for Nurick. Witness, at Max Levenson's directions, took the brandy to plaintiff's store, and subsequently received part payment for it, and a "good for," for the balance (£90).

Cross-examined: Two of the casks were Levenson's.

Moses Marks, a feather buyer, of Oudtshoorn, stated that Nurick was a dealer in brandy and he asked witness if it was possible to get brandy at Prince Albert. The Prince Albert brandy was of better quality than that made in Oudtshoorn. Nurick's inquiry was two or three days before Levenson purchased the brandy at Prince Albert. Subsequently, witness met defendant at Oudtshoorn, and asked him why he did not take the brandy, and he replied that he would have done so if it had been sent to him before.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Hugh McGregor, broker, of Cape Town, stated that the price of brandy, in Cape Town, in August of last year, averaged £22 5s. per leaguer ex. wood, delivery, Cape Town. In September it averaged £22 12s. 6d. At Prince Albert the difference would be five to seven per cent. less. On March 1 of this year the price was £16 7s. 6d., and after the opening of the new season it fell to £14 10s.

Cross-examined: The price fell in October, and never recovered.

Isaac Nurick, the defendant, stated he carried on business at Oudtshoorn as a feather and produce dealer, and he had also a wholesale brandy store in partnership with Leutau Bros., of Willowmore. In June, 1903, he wired plaintiff inquiring at what price brandy could be obtained in Prince Albert, but received no reply. He saw Max Levenson in the following August, and told him that if he could buy brandy at Prince Albert at £20 per leaguer he would purchase it. He saw him repeatedly afterwards, but he never mentioned the matter to him. In September, however, Levenson met witness, and told him he had got 30 leaguers of brandy, and asked witness if he wanted it. Witness replied that he did not, as he had his full stock, and Levenson said he could get more for it elsewhere. Witness saw plaintiff several times, but the first time he heard of the brandy was in March, when he received a demand for the price. Max Levenson admitted to witness that he had made a mistake, and asked him to endorse a bill for £90, to help him to pay for some brandy, which witness declined to do. Witness gave no authority to Max Levenson to purchase brandy for him.

In cross-examination, witness denied that he told Marks he would settle up if he got the brandy. Witness paid £20 per leaguer for brandy at Oudtshoorn, and heard nothing of brandy being obtained in Prince Albert at £17 10s. per leaguer.

Mr. McGregor closed his case, and Mr. Burton having reviewed the evidence, De Villiers, C.J., without hearing counsel for the defence, said the onus of proving the agency of Max Levenson lay on the plaintiff. If that was proved, the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed, because, according to the plaintiff, Max Levenson had been instructed to make all the requisite financial arrangements, and if, therefore, the agency was established, and the plaintiff acting on the knowledge of that agency and on the instructions of the agent, advanced the money and paid it to the vendor, clearly the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the amount from the defendant, who instructed him. Therefore, the whole question hinged on the further question whether that agency had or had not been established. Counsel had contended that the fact that De Witt stated, and no doubt, truthfully, that Max Levenson mentioned his principal—the defendant—as the purchaser, went far to corroborate Max Levenson's statement. Max Levenson may have understood that he received instructions from the defendant, but that was not sufficient to show that he was so instructed. He had to prove that he was so instructed, and on that point there was the statement of the defendant that he did not appoint him. The impression on his (his lordship's) mind was that Max Levenson might have misunderstood the defendant, but that the defendant never intended to give any authority to Max enson to purchase the brandy on behalf. It seemed to him that the liabilities of the case were in favour of the defendant rather than plaintiff, one circumstance that it was impossible to lose sight of was the long delay he had been on the part of the plaintiff—he would not say in bringing the on—but in making it clear to the defendant that he had grounds for an on. Plaintiff must have been doubtful as to the agency. If the agency clear, one would think that plaintiff would have lost no time in informing the defendant that brandy was being stored in a hired place. The plaintiff did not pretend he was not a man of very moderate means, or that he was a man to whom £10 or £190 was of no importance, what he ought to have done, and what he would have done if he had been of his case, would have been to give clear and definite notice to the defendant that the brandy was in the case. Now he did not do that. This action took place in August, and had been proved that no definite decision was made on the defendant until then. It was not likely that if the plaintiff had been sure of his case he would have allowed this time to pass. Under all the circumstances, therefore as the onus of proving the case lay on the plaintiff, and he had done so, there was nothing to do but give judgment for the defendant with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset. Defendant's: Michau and De Villiers.]

DELPORT V. NESER.

{ 1904.
Oct. 28th.
" 31st.

Purchase and sale—Transfer—
Tender—Divisible obligation—Non-joinder of parties—Exceptions.

The plaintiff and one R. bought from the defendant four farms for £11,500, the price being payable in two instalments and by bond to be passed by the purchasers for the balance. After paying half an instalment, R. became insolvent, and the plaintiff, after paying half an instalment, tendered to pay half of the second instalment and to pass a bond for half the balance, and he claimed transfer of one-half undivided share of the farms.

Held, on exceptions to the plaintiff's declaration, that the obligation to pass transfer is indivisible, and that the plaintiff's tender of half the purchase price does not entitle him to claim transfer of half the farm.

This was an argument on exceptions, the defendant excepting to the plaintiff's declaration on the grounds of non-joinder and no cause for action being disclosed.

The declaration set out that the parties were farmers, residing in the district of Colesberg. On the 17th April, 1903, the plaintiff and one Jacobus Benjamin le Roux purchased from the defendant certain landed property, consisting of the farms Ruigtefontein, Landdroskopp, Godeelte Kopjes, and Schalkwykskraal, for the sum of £11,500. The plaintiff was unable to pay his pro rata share of the first instalment, but the defendant agreed to give him an extension, and repeated it again on the second instalment falling due. On the 11th December, 1903, plaintiff paid on account of his pro rata share of the first and second instalments the sum of £2,200. The plaintiff asked for time to pay the balance of £300, but the defendant refused to allow any further extension, and subsequently plaintiff tendered to pay the £300, with interest from 1903, and to pass a first mortgage bond for £3,250, and otherwise comply with the conditions of the deed of sale. Le Roux paid his pro rata share of the first instalment, but had paid nothing further, and his estate had been surrendered. Prior to and on the 3rd May, 1904, the plaintiff requested the defendant to pass transfer to him of his undivided one-half share of the said property, tendering to the defendant the said balance of £300, and to pass a mortgage bond for the remainder, but the defendant refused to accept the tender or pass transfer. Plaintiff claimed damages to the extent of £500 and transfer to him of an undivided one-half part or share of and in the said property.

The defendant excepted on the ground that the action was improperly instituted and the summons and declaration bad in law, in that the trustee in Le Roux's estate was not joined in the suit, and also that the declaration disclosed no cause of action against him, in that, according to the true intent and meaning of the deed of sale the plaintiff and Le Roux were together the purchaser, and the defendant had nowhere agreed to pass transfer to the plaintiff of an undivided one-half share.

Mr. Burton was for plaintiff and Mr. Close for the defendant.

Counsel were then heard in argument; the chief points of which sufficiently appear from the following judgment.

Cur. Ad. Vult.

Postea (October 31st.).

De Villiers, C.J.: The declaration alleges that the plaintiff and one Le Roux bought certain four farms from the defendant for £11,500 upon certain conditions, one of which was that the price was to be paid in two instalments of £2,000 and £3,000 respectively, and by a mortgage bond on the farms for the balance of the price, viz., £6,500. The declaration further alleged that the plaintiff paid a pro rata share of the first instalment, and afterwards tendered to pay a pro rata share of the second instalment, and to pass a bond on half-share of the farms for £3,250. The declaration further alleged that Le Roux paid his pro rata share of the first instalment, but has paid nothing further, and that his estate has been sequestrated as insolvent. The prayer is for transfer of half-share of the farms and for £500 damages, alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's refusal to give transfer. The defendant has filed a twofold exception to the declaration, namely, that the action is bad, without Le Roux or his trustee being joined as co-plaintiffs, and that, regard being made to the terms of the contract, no cause of action is disclosed in the declaration.

I see no reason for altering the view which I expressed at an early stage of the argument, that either Le Roux should have been joined as a co-plaintiff, or the plaintiff should have tendered the full price before he could claim transfer to himself of one undivided half-share. There has been much learned argument as to the difference between divisible and indivisible obligations, and numerous cases have been cited, but none of these cases bears upon the exact point which has arisen in the present case. The defendant's counsel has altogether relied upon the express terms of this particular contract, and has not relied much upon his general rights as vendor under our law. To my mind, however, the fact that the purchasers were entitled to pass a bond for £6,500, does not give either of them a greater right to claim transfer of one-half than he would have had if the sale had been for cash. It is an elementary rule of our law that the vendor may retain the thing sold for cash until the price is tendered and this rule applies whether the thing sold be moveable or immovable property. It is not a part, but the whole of the price which must be paid, and until that is done, the vendor of moveable property is not bound to deliver it, and the vendor of immovable property is not bound to transfer it. If, therefore, two or more persons buy land together, they must all join in the action against the vendor for transfer, and tender the price, or, if one alone sues for his share, he must tender the whole price. If authority were required I need only refer to the following passage in Foet (19.1.1), which, strangely enough, was not cited by counsel on either side. After defining the actio empti, Foet says: "If more persons than one have together purchased the same thing at the same time, for one price, or if more persons than one are heirs of one purchaser, it is not competent for each to sue by the action ex empto, in respect of his share, for delivery of part of the thing sold on tender of a pro rata share of the price; but it is necessary that the action should be at the suit of all of them, or at the suit of one of them, on tender of the full price for the delivery of the whole thing." The circumstance that, in the present case, a bond had to be passed for the balance of the purchase price, certainly strengthens the position taken up on behalf of the vendor, but even if the sale had been for cash, he would not have been bound to transfer one half of the farm on tender to him of half the purchase price. The opinion of Pothier, who follows that of du Moulin in this matter, does not quite agree with Foet. In his treatise on Obligations (295), Pothier says: "The obligation to deliver a piece of land, fundum tradi, is a divisible obligation; for this delivery may be made in parts, the act which forms the object of the obligation being therefore a divisible act, it cannot be doubted, according to the principles which we have established, that this obligation is divisible; our decision is confirmed by the texts of our law; for although the obligation of a borrower is the obligation of returning a specific thing, obligatio rem tradi, nevertheless, the law decides that the heirs are regularly bound for the part only of which they are heirs, which is the character of divisible obligations." Further on, however, Pothier admits that another passage in the Digest (72 De Verb. Obl.), is diametrically opposed to his view. The passage reads as follows: "Stipulationes non dividuntur earum rerum quae divisionem non recipiunt; veluti viae, itineris, actus, aquaeductus, caeterorumque servitutum. Item puto et si quis faciendum aliquid stipulatus sit; ut puta, fundum tradi, vel fossam fodiri, vel insulam fabricari, vel operas, vel quid his simile; horum enim divisio corrumpit stipulationem." Ulpian, whose statement of the law is there given, places an obligation to transfer land on the same footing as an obligation to build a house, and holds that both obligations are indivisible. Pothier however, holds that the obligation to transfer land is divisible unless it is accompanied by circumstances which show that it was intended to be indivisible, as, for instance, where a person wishing to build a house and not having a place to lay the necessary materials agrees with his neighbour that the latter should give him land near the site of the house. In a subsequent passage (section 515), he says: "If I have bought a certain estate, though this estate be susceptible of parts, yet one of the heirs of the person who sold it to me would not be entitled to offer me his part of the estate, divided or undivided, in discharge of his obligation, if his co-heirs were not also ready to deliver me theirs, because the division of this estate would be a prejudice to me. I only bought it in order to possess the whole of it, and I should not have bought a part of it only." An analogous mode of reasoning would, however, be applicable to the case of the vendor of an estate where one of the purchaser's heirs offers him payment of part of the price, and demands transfer of part of the land. The vendor might fairly say that the division of the estate would be a prejudice to him, and that he only sold it because he wished to part with the whole of it, and that he would not have sold a part of it only. I am clearly of opinion, for the reasons already given, that the obligation of the defendant in the present case to transfer the four farms is an indivisible obligation, and that without a tender of the whole of the purchase price, or of a bond for the whole of the unpaid balance, he is not bound to transfer one-half of the farms to the plaintiffs. The exceptions must therefore be allowed, with costs.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: V. A. van der Byl. Defendants' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

APPLICATIONS.

FERNANDEZ V. FERNANDEZ. } 1904.
Oct. 31st.

Mr. Alexander applied, as a matter of urgency, for some direction of the Court pending the hearing of this matter, which appeared in the list of general motions. The plaintiff sought alimony, etc., from her husband. She alleged that she had been turned out of the house since last Friday week without any clothing, except that which she was wearing, and that she was destitute. She was at present living at a boarding-house, and was living on charity. Replying to the Bench, counsel said that the applicant could wait until the matter was reached in the ordinary course, if she were given her clothing and so on.

Mr. Burton (for the respondent) said he would not object to the applicant being given back her clothing.

Mr. Alexander said that he would like an order from the Court under the second prayer. Prayer (b) called upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to restore immediately to applicant her home, clothing, furniture, and effects, and custody of the children.

Mr. Burton said that his learned friend was now eating into the whole case.

Mr. Alexander said he was instructed that the applicant desired access to the two children, and also her clothing and documents.

Maasdorp, J., said that by consent, the applicant would be allowed to obtain her clothing, the question of costs to stand over.

WATSON AND CO. V. JONES.

Mr. Burton applied, as a matter of urgency, for the fixing of a day for hearing the trial of Wm. Watson and Co. v. Jones, at present set down in the list for Friday next. He said that it was important that they should have some definite idea as to whether it would be taken on that day because witness would have to come down from Vryburg. There were eleven cases down for Friday, and this case stood tenth in the list.

[Maasdorp, J.: We are not going to run beyond the term if we can possibly get out of it. When does the Long Vacation commence?]

It is supposed to begin on the 15th November, but I may mention that there are cases set down for the 21st November.

Maasdorp, J., said that the only other date that the Court could grant would be the first day of next term. There was very little chance of the case being set down out of term.

Mr. Gardiner said that he had drawn the pleadings for the plaintiffs, but he had not been instructed in regard to the present application.

The Court eventually ordered the matter to stand over pending further inquiries.

Later in the day, it was stated that the parties were agreeable to the case standing over till next term.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

REX V. MOFUKING AND KOTZE.

Spoor evidence.

Evidence that a certain spoor might have been made by the foot of an accused, the spoor being an old one and not clearly traceable all the way to accused's hut, held not be of itself sufficient evidence to support a conviction.

This was an appeal from a conviction of the A.R.M. of Albert, who had convicted the appellants of being concerned in the theft of an African sheep, the property of some person or persons unknown, and sentenced each of them to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. The charge was laid under Act 35 of 1893. The grounds of the appeal were (1) that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and (2) that it was contrary to law.

From the evidence it appeared that the skin of a certain sheep had been found at a slaughter-place, near Groenvlei, situate about 300 yards from the hut occupied by the prisoners. It was the opinion of the principal witness that the sheep had been slaughtered about 8 or 9 days before the discovery was made. The prosecution was founded upon an allegation that the spoor of the prisoners led straight from the slaughter-place to the hut that the men occupied. For the defence, evidence was led to show that no spoor could be traced between the slaughter-place and the hut, and that the hard nature of the ground and the recent wind made it impossible for spoor to be formed. The slaughter-place was situate at a stone kopje.

Mr. Burton was for the appellants; Mr. Howel Jones was for the respondents.

Mr. Burton submitted that it would be most dangerous to convict on evidence of the kind brought by the prosecution, and that the evidence was not satisfactory or conclusive.

[Maasdorp, J., said that the witnesses for the prosecution seemed to be most positive that the spoor could be traced from point to point, and the question seemed to be one of credibility as between the witnesses.]

Mr. Burton pointed out that there was absolutely nothing in the case to connect the accused with the crime, except the evidence as to spoor, and he submitted that that evidence was of such a character that the prisoners ought not to have been convicted.

Hopley, J., said it seemed peculiar to him that the "spoor" found in the damp sand corresponded with the spoor made in the dry sand further on.]

Mr. Burton contended that there was not sufficient evidence to convict the prisoners of the crime.

Mr. Jones said that, of course, the whole question rested on "spoor" evidence, but that evidence was very clear, and was the only evidence that could convict in this case.

[Hopley, J.: You need not defend "spoor" evidence, because men have often been hanged on that evidence.]

Maasdorp, J., said that in this case the two accused were convicted by the Magistrate with the theft of a sheep. It appeared that the slaughter-place was discovered some 300 yards from the hut of the accused and some spoor were also discovered there. These spoor were traced in the direction of the residence of the accused, and one of the witnesses stated that they were actually traced up to the accused's house. Now, in dealing with the case, he thought it would be advisable to take the case of the second accused first, and consider whether there was evidence enough to justify the finding of the Magistrate in the case. It appeared that a bare foot spoor was found near the slaughter-place, and a bare foot spoor was found at the hut in which Koetsee resided. Upon arrival at Koetsee's house, the policeman did not find him. Nothing was found in the hut connected with the theft. From the evidence, it appeared that the policeman sent for Koetsee, who was some distance off, and on his arrival examined his foot, and found that he had a broad foot like the spoor. That was the sole evidence against Koetsee. The Magistrate arrived at the conclusion that that spoor must have been the spoor made by Koetsee. He (Mr. Justice Maasdorp) was not satisfied that the Magistrate should have drawn the inference that the spoor of a foot like Koetsee's was Koetsee's. For that reason, the Court felt that they ought to quash the conviction. That decision decided the case of the second accused. If in the case of the second accused doubt was thrown on the evidence of the policeman as to the second charge, it would certainly affect his evidence with regard to the alleged spoor of the first accused. The evidence in that case was however, somewhat stronger, because it was alleged that it was a boot spoor, and it might be possible to identify it as having been made by the boot worn by the accused; but they had evidence that it was difficult to follow the spoor, and the evidence of the policeman had not been corroborated. Under the circumstances, he thought that when the Court bore in mind that some time had elapsed after the spoor were made, and when they were found, that, from the nature of the weather, there was good reason to arrive at the conclusion that the spoors were to some extent effaced, they had to arrive at the conclusion that, although the Magistrate appeared to have gone carefully into the case, he had not allowed certain circumstances in favour of the accused. The conviction in each case would be quashed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. FARQUHARSON. { 1904.
Oct. 31st.
Nov. 7th.

Water—Municipal regulations—
Act 39 of 1879, Secs. 35 and 37.

Under certain regulations framed under Sec. 37 of Act 39 of 1879, the Municipality of Q. forbade persons residing within a certain Municipal area to water gardens by means of hose pipes attached to pipes connected with the public water supply within certain hours. One F., being convicted of contravening this regulation, urged (on appeal) that it was ultra vires, inasmuch as the Act gave the Municipality no power to regulate the supply of water.

Held on appeal, that under Sec. 37 of the Act the Council had power to make such regulations as they might deem expedient for carrying out the powers as to supply of water, etc., thereby entrusted to them, and that hence the said regulations were intra vires.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Magistrate of Queen's Town fining Robert C. Farquharson (the appellant) 10s or the alternative of seven days' imprisonment for contravening the provisions of the Queen's Town Municipal Council water regulations.

The appellant was summoned on the complaint and information of the Acting Chief Constable, in that he did, on or about the 6th day of August, contravene the provisions of the Queen's Town water regulations in that he did wrongfully and unlawfully, by means of a water-hose use water for the purpose of irrigation during the time which the use of water for such a purpose was restricted. The regulations stipulated that any person contravening the regulations was liable to a penalty not exceeding £2, or the alternative of seven days' imprisonment. The seventh section of the Act stipulated that it should be lawful for the Council to decrease the daily supply of water, and should there be a reduction in the supply the Council should not be responsible for it. In August a Corporation notice was issued which stated that the residents of the district in which the appellant resided would be allowed to irrigate their land with a hose from 3 to 7 p.m. on Thursdays of each week, and daily from 5 to 7 p.m. with watering cans. The appellant was fined for using his hose during the "can hours." Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for the appellant), contended that although the Council might have powers to regulate the hours of use for the public taps, he (counsel) contended they had no right to interfere with the use of water on a man's private land. They had no right to say you cannot use a hose. You must use a watering can.

[Hopley, J., remarked that if Sir H. Juta's contention was correct there could never be a prosecution for the unlawful use of water.]

Sir H. Juta said at the trial of the case exception was taken to the summons on the ground that it was bad in law, as it should be made out in the name of the Mayor and Councillors of Queen's Town, instead of which it was made out in the name of the Acting Chief Constable. Under section 35 of Act 39 of 1879, under which the summons was brought, no power was conferred on the Council to regulate the supply of water. Exception was also taken to the summons on the ground that the hose was attached to a Municipal tap, when in reality it was attached to the appellant's private tap. It was also contended that the regulations did not allow the Council to state how the water was to be used. The appellant contended that if the supply of water was decreasing it was the duty of the Council to restrict the supply of water to the Cape Government Railway, and a local brewery, which they did not. Counsel (continuing) said that under the Queen's Town Municipal Act there was no power given them to make regulations with regard to the water supply. They had no power to say to a man, "You shall not use a hose, but you may use a can." His submission was that the Queen's Town Council had no rights to make any regulation such as they had.

Postea (November 7), without calling upon Mr. Schreiner, K.C., who appeared for the respondents.

Maasdorp, J.: Amongst the regulations of the Queen's Town Municipality, promulgated by Proclamation No. 372, of 1891, under the provisions of Act No. 39, of 1879, are the following: Water Regulation No. 7: It shall be lawful for the Council at any time, after 24 hours' notice, when from the decrease of water in the reservoir, or any other cause, to decrease the daily supply of water to the public aqueducts, and to close the public water leadings. And No. 18: The Council at all times reserve the right as to the quantity of water to be supplied for domestic or irrigation purposes, and the times and manner for supplying the same. And any person taking water during unauthorised hours shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding two pounds sterling, or in default of payment to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding seven days." Acting under the terms of the 7th Regulation, the Council gave public notice on the 29th June, 1904, that: (A) Residents in the Earl of Dugmore-street, also those on the north side of the railway line, may irrigate by means of a hose, etc., from 3 to 7 p.m., on Thursdays. (B) In addition to above, water will be turned on daily for domestic use from 6 to 8.30 a.m. and 5 to 7 p.m., during which hours watering by means of a can is permitted. On Saturday, the 6th of August, the defendant, whose residence comes within the terms of this notice was seen watering his garden by means of a hose attached to the top of a water-leading, communicating with the Municipal pipes, at 6 o'clock in the afternoon. This act is alleged in the charge against the defendant as a contravention of Regulation No. 18, in that he irrigated by means of a hose contrary to the terms of Notice No. 40, given by virtue of Regulation No. 7. Certain exceptions were taken to the charge at the trial, which were overruled by the Magistrate. Counsel for the appellant admitted that the exception taken to the power of the Chief Constable to prosecute is disposed of by section 5 of Act 32, of 1902. But it was contended that the third exception is good, because Act 39, of 1879, does not in express terms confer upon the Municipality, the power to make regulations in respect of the control, and distribution of the water supplied for the use of the inhabitants. It does seem curious that when section 37 of the Act was framed, which deals so minutely with many matters of public interest, that no express mention was made of the regulation of the supply and distribution of water under the control and management of the Council. But we find that under section 35 power is given to the Council to lay down watercourses, water-pipes, and reservoirs for supplying the inhabitants of the Municipality with water. It is therefore within the powers of the Municipality to take measures to supply the inhabitants with water, and, under section 37, the Council can make such regulations as may be expedient for exercising their powers, and such as may be necessary for the benefit of the Municipality and the comfort of the inhabitants. The Council, therefore, possesses the right to make regulations for regulating the supply of water. But, then, it is contended that the restrictions imposed by the notice are ultra vires of the regulations, because the regulations only provide for a decrease of water in case there is a decrease of water in the reservoir. Now, although the notice itself does not state that there was such a decrease of water in the reservoir, it was proved at the time that the water in the reservoir was falling. Under Regulation 18, the Council has the right to regulate the quantity of water to be supplied for domestic and irrigation purposes, and the times and manner of supplying the same. Under Notice No. 40, water is supplied for irrigation and domestic use on Thursdays, and for domestic use on other days. If the notice had stopped here, no exception could be taken to it. But in order to meet possible urgent necessity, the Council provided for the use of a limited quantity for watering plants on days when the water is supplied for domestic purposes. To ensure the use of only a limited quantity, it is directed that the watering shall take place by means of a can, and it seems to me quite reasonable to expect that such will be the effect of the regulation. The defendant, instead of being thankful for the privilege of using a limited quantity of water in the manner prescribed on days, when he might be wholly prevented from taking it for any but domestic purposes, resents the action of the Council as an interference with his rights. In my opinion, both the regulations and the notice are within the powers of the Council, and the fact that the Council continued to carry out their contracts with others for supplying water, cannot justify the defendant in contravening the regulations of the Municipality. The appeal must be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., applied, on behalf of the respondent Municipality, for an order for costs of appeal. He said he thought it was quite unnecessary to have gone beyond the Magistrate's decision.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for appellant, contended that it had not been an ill-brought appeal, and that costs should not be allowed to respondents. The case was really brought by the police and not by the Municipality.

Counsel having been heard further, Maasdorp, J., said that this was really a police case. There would be no order as to costs.

LE ROUX V. MALHERBE. { 1904.
Oct. 31st.
[For Head Note to this case, see Ex parte
MALHERBE (14 C.T.R., 614.)]

This was an appeal from a decision of De Villiers, C.J., making absolute a certain rule nisi (see 14 C.T.R. 614). The appellant now sought to have this order under the Derelict Lands Act, in favour of the present respondent set aside. Mr. Schreiner, K.C., with him Mr. Benjamin, was for the appellant; Mr. Burton, with him Mr. Van Zyl, was for the respondent.

Mr. Schreiner said that this was an appeal from a decision of the Chief Justice, sitting alone, in a matter in which the respondent, Malherbe, had obtained a rule nisi in Chambers, under the Derelict Lands Act, thereafter made absolute, in regard to a certain farm, Berg Rivier's Hoek, in the district of French Hoek. At the hearing of the application to make the rule final, he (Mr. Schreiner) appeared on behalf of Mrs. Le Roux, who was one of two parties desiring to show cause against the rule nisi. The widow Le Roux now appealed against the decision, and he (counsel) thought it would appear that a nice point arose in regard to the practice and procedure under the Derelict Lands Act in connection with this matter. The petitioner said that in or about the year 1872 he purchased from one John Orris Douglas, a certain farm, called La Dauphine, and also an undefined one-eighth share in the quit-rent farm called Berg Rivier's Hoek, in extent 478 morgen 211 square yards, both properties being situate at French Hoek, and on the 6th October of that year he obtained transfer of the said properties. In 1891 he sold one-half of his eighth share in Berg Rivier's Hoek, and on the 27th October transferred it to J. P. le Roux. In March of last year he sold his remaining one-sixteenth share in the said farm to one Edward Starke. The Registrar, however, declined to register the transfer to Starke, on the ground that the late A. A. de Villiers, from whom the said Douglas, petitioner's predecessor in title, had bought it, had only a sixteenth share in the said farm, and so had no power to transfer a one-eighth share, as was wrongly done by him. Petitioner had caused search to be made in the Deeds Office, and had ascertained that, although at the time that the executors of the said De Villiers passed transfer to the said Douglas, the said De Villiers was the registered proprietor of a one-eighth share in the said farm, he had, as a matter of fact, already transferred away a one-sixteenth share, which had not been noted against his deed of transfer, and petitioner had also ascertained that a one-eighth undivided part or share in the said farm still stood registered in the name of Peter Eduard Hauman, one of the original grantees of the said farm, which was granted on the 30th April, 1839. Proceeding, counsel said his point was that there was nothing in the statement of the case anywhere in the affidavits to show that, in point of fact, there was any such prescription against the share of P. E. Hauman, senior, by the applicant. The name of P. E. Hauman, senior, was as a matter of fact registered as proprietor of the one-eighth share after his death. Barring an expression of opinion by the applicant that there must have been some transaction by which A. A. de Villiers would have purchased or acquired a portion of P. E. Hauman's share, there was nothing to link P. E. Hauman's share acquired in 1839 in any way with the occupation of Malherbe, the applicant. His contention was that the applicant must come and make good his claim under the Derelict Lands Act. The applicant should have brought, he submitted, a declaratory action against those who had an interest in the farm. The farm was valuable, the Cape Town Council had turned its attention in that direction, and the interest of the appellant was a matter of some importance to her.

[De Villiers, C.J.: She has no interest whatever.]

That, with very great respect, would seem to beg the question. I am putting it that, when the facts fully appear, applicant has no prescription of his own over against P. E. Hauman, senior, specially, other than that he is now in the possession of a portion of the farm, using and occupying against the owners of the farm. He has got a right against the farm, but not a right to the one-eighth share of my client specifically. Proceeding, Mr. Schreiner said that there was no principle of law which allowed the petitioner to prescribe specifically against the appellant any more than against the other owners. The Town Council had become the owner by purchase of a very large portion of the shares, twenty-three thirty-seconds were now in its possession, and it was now only a question of paying out certain moneys. He submitted that the Derelict Lands Act was not intended to give the petitioner title in the farm in such a case as this. The appellant, in her affidavit, denied that Malherbe had since 1872 occupied and made use of a one-eighth share of the farm Berg Rivier's Hoek. The farm was only used as a grazing ground. It was not divided or fenced off in any way, so that no one of the numerous co-owners could say that he used an eighth or a sixteenth. There was no ground for the petitioner's statement that his predecessor in title, A. A. de Villiers, bought a half of the one-eighth share belonging to Pieter Eduard Hauman, sen. There was no ground for the statement of the petitioner to the effect that there was a half of the share of the said farm belonging to Malherbe registered in the name of P. E. Hauman. The said eighth share, which was still registered in the name of P. E. Hauman, belonged to deponent, who purchased the same in 1894 at a sale by public auction, from the estate of the late P. E. Hauman, jun., who was a grandson of the said P. E. Hauman, sen. P. E. Hauman, sen., who owned the farm La Brie, some time near the end of the eighteenth century, or at the beginning of the nineteenth century, was one of the eight farmers who got the Berg Rivier's Hoek as a grazing ground for the eight farms which they respectively owned. This grant was not made out until 1839, and prior to that date, P. E. Hauman, sen., had died. On the death of P. E. Hauman, sen., La Brie, with one-eighth share in Berg Rivier's Hoek, was bought at public auction by his son J. S. Hauman, sen., who, however, never obtained grant of the eighth share in Berg Rivier's Hoek, though he occupied and enjoyed the use thereof from 1831 to the date of his death in 1862. In 1862 La Brie, together with the eighth share in Berg Rivier's Hoek was sold to P. E. Hauman, jun., who took transfer of La Brie, but did not take transfer of the eighth share. He died on the 17th April, 1894, and his landed property was put up for sale by auction on the 15th June, 1894, and sold to deponent, it being stated by the auctioneer that La Brie was being sold with a share in Berg Rivier's Hoek appertaining to it, but that transfer had not been taken of the share, and the purchaser could find out about transfer and obtain same for himself.

Mr. Burton said that his learned friend admitted that there was somewhere in the farm a derelict share, which must be given to Malherbe, and which Malherbe must get. The other owners held six transfers, and there was no notice of omission on their part. The one-eighth share left to Hauman was transferred in 1839, and counsel submitted those who advanced the argument that Hauman owned the share were mistaken. In all probability, Mrs. Le Roux's attention was drawn to the matter by the publication of the rule nisi. Counsel could not find a word in the affidavits as to her occupation of this share. To a man who was in possession of a share, it was open to the respondent to show a better title. Counsel submitted that the whole position came down to one as to whether the appellant had satisfied the Court as to the claim of the one-eighth share from P. E. Hauman, and if that had not been done, then he submitted it was derelict.

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply,

Cur. Ad. Vult.

Postea (November 14th).

Maasdorp, J., delivered judgment in the matter, which was an appeal from a judgment of the Chief Justice sitting as a Divisional Court: At the hearing of the original motion in this matter when the applicant applied to be registered as the owner of 1-16th share of Berg Riviers Hoek on the ground of prescription, the respondent, Helena le Roux, disputed his entire claim to any share in the farm, and she herself set up a claim to be registered as the owner of one-eighth. On appeal that position was abandoned by her, and she admitted that Malherbe was entitled to some share by prescription, but contended that it should not go in reduction of her share, but in abatement of the shares of all the owners of Berg Riviers Hoek. If she be entitled to more than the 1-16th, which was allowed her in the order made by the Chief Justice, then I think her contention is correct, that the occupation of the applicant should not be regarded in the question of prescription as an adverse holding against her particular share. It is therefore necessary to consider whether she is entitled to more than the 1-16th share awarded to her by the order. She alleges that her title to one-eighth of the farm Berg Riviers Hoek can be traced in unbroken succession from the right thereto held by P. E. Hauman, senior. It is quite evident from the affidavits that none of the witnesses can have any personal knowledge of what occurred before 1831, and their evidence in that respect is entirely hearsay, or based on tradition. There is no legal proof that P. E. Hauman, senior, had during his lifetime any right to a share in Berg Riviers Hoek, or had as of right any tenure which could by prescription have ripened into ownership. There is no legal proof that he had any right in that farm, or pretended to have any, which he could have transferred upon his death to his son, J. S. Hauman, junior. Again, it can hardly be known to any of the witnesses what occurred in 1831 after the death of P. E. Hauman, senior. Yet we have the positive statement made by Helena le Roux that on his death the farm La Brie, together with one-eighth share in Berg Riviers Hoek belonging to his estate, was sold by public auction to his son J. S. Hauman, senior. In this she is supported by J. S. Hauman, junior, the grandson of P. E. Hauman, who could not 73 years ago have been of an age to speak positively as to what then occurred. But if Malherbe is to be believed, these statements as to Berg Riviers Hoek must be correct, because it appears from search in the Master's Office that the farm La Brie was bequeathed by P. E. Hauman, senior, in his will to his son, J. S. Hauman, senior, and no mention is made in the will of any place in the Berg Riviers Hoek farm. If that be so, we have documentary evidence to set off against hearsay statements, and proof that nothing passed to J. S. Hauman, sen., in respect of the farm Berg Riviers Hoek, nor is there any evidence that he had any right to the farm which could be passed to his son. In 1839, the first authentic proof of title to Berg Riviers Hoek is discovered. In that year the Government granted Berg Riviers Hoek in eight undivided shares to P. E. Hauman, the owner of La Brie, and seven other owners of seven neighbouring farms. If J. S. Hauman, sen., was at that time entitled to the 4th by succession to his father, it is difficult to see why the grant was not made to him, or why he did not secure his rights. It is, on the other hand, easy to understand that he could make no claim under this grant if he purchased La Brie, and nothing more. This grant to P. E. Hauman in 1839 disposes of all idea of prescription, before 1839, in those who pretend to claim through him. But it is said that from 1839 to 1862, J. S. Hauman, sen., used and occupied 4th share of Berg Riviers Hoek, as of right, and prescription was, therefore, running in his favour during that period. The evidence upon this point is of a very doubtful character, since the witnesses upon the point can hardly give us, as of their own knowledge, any positive statements as to his intentions at the time. But for the present I shall leave this part of the case there. H. le Roux says that in 1862 the executors of J. S. Hauman, sen., sold at public auction the farm La Brie, together with one-eighth share in Berg Riviers Hoek, appertaining thereto, to P. E. Hauman, jun. Malherbe says the records filed in the Master's Office contradict this, and that the liquidation accounts filed in the estate shows that the farm La Brie was sold to P. E. Hauman for £1,500, and Berg Riviers Hoek ground to one P. A. le Roux for £549. This share in Berg Riviers Hoek, the said J. S. Hauman had transfer of, and no mention is made of any other share in the said farm. This piece of documentary evidence would have the effect of showing that no share in Berg Riviers Hoek was sold to P. E. Hauman, jun., and also that when J. S. Hauman, sen., occupied Berg Riviers Hoek he did so in respect of a share other than the one in dispute. This would weaken the evidence of prescription between 1839 and 1862. If P. E. Hauman, jun., purchased La Brie only in 1862, he could not have occupied Berg Riviers Hoek by virtue of such purchase, and his intention to do so is doubtful when we find that he had other shares in Berg Riviers Hoek, bought in 1868, 1885, 1883. Then it is stated that in 1891 two and a one-eighth shares of Berg Riviers Hoek were sold in the insolvent estate of P. E.

Hauman, and that he himself bought out of the estate the farm La Brie and the one-eighth share appertaining to it. Here, again, upon reference to the agreement between him and the trustees, we find that La Brie and adjoining ground is mentioned, but nothing said of the one-eighth share. Up to this point there is no clear proof that the title to one-eighth of Berg Riviers Hoek passed to the successive owners of La Brie; on the contrary, there seems to be pretty strong proof that it did not. Nor is there proof that independently of title, the successive owners of La Brie occupied Berg Riviers Hoek in a manner which made prescription run in their favour. When we come finally to the sale to the respondent, H. le Roux, it would seem that at the sale by the executors of P. E. Hauman, jun., there was some idea that some right to an eighth share in Berg Riviers Hoek did exist, and such right was sold for whatever it was worth. It is only too probable that the executors would not have made themselves responsible for more, in view of the doubtful and uncertain nature of the right. I do not think H. le Roux has established a right to one-eighth of Berg Riviers Hoek, and considering the doubtful and hazy nature of her claim, she should have been well content with the one-sixteenth share awarded to her, to which there was no other claimant. It is admitted now that the applicant is entitled by prescription to a share in the farm. It was found that his prescription ran in respect of one-sixteenth of the farm, and there being one-sixteenth to which no title in any other farm is set up, I think the applicant is entitled to have it registered in his name. The appeal must therefore be dismissed, with costs. Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

The Chief Justice said that his reasons for the judgment appealed against had been fully stated. He added: I only wish to add that, in view of the legislation of last session, the Act 35, of 1896, would seem to me to need further amendment. The 19th section of that Act directs that appeals from the Superior Courts shall be heard before not less than three judges, one of whom shall be the Chief Justice of the Colony. By the 2nd section of Act 35, of 1904, it is enacted that an appeal shall lie from the decision of any Divisional Court, to the Supreme Court, sitting as a Court of Appeal. Where the appeal is from the decision of the Chief Justice sitting alone in a Divisional Court, it seems highly desirable that he should not take any part in the Court of Appeal. I do not suggest that any judge would allow his previously expressed opinion to outweigh good counter-arguments brought forward on appeal, but there is a decided advantage in admitting his judgment to the scrutiny of judges who have taken no part in the original hearing, and to the unfettered criticism of counsel for the appellants.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsen; Respondent in default.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

DEN V. DEN.

{ 1904.
Nov. 1st.

This was an action brought by Mrs. Den, of Maitland, against her husband, who was now stated to be residing in the Transkei, for restitution of conjugal rights, on the ground of his wilful and malicious desertion. Mr. Rainsford was for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Mr. Rainsford applied for leave to amend the declaration, and to substitute for the alternative prayer of judicial separation a prayer for a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community.

His Lordship assented to the amendment.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, produced the duplicate entry of the marriage.

The plaintiff said she was married to the defendant at St. Luke's Church, Salt River, on the 3rd October, 1900, and afterwards they lived at Maitland. In August, 1901, he deserted her. She heard from her husband for the last time about two and a half years ago.

By the Court: They had a quarrel before her husband deserted her. He was addicted to drinking habits, and he was unable to support her. The separation was due to his drinking habits and his inability to support her.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th January, failing which, defendant to show cause on the 1st February why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community; rule to be served on the defendant personally, in time to enable him to appear on the 1st February.

Postea (April 18th, 1905). The rule was made absolute.

NGATWYN V. NGATWYN.

This was an action brought by Elias Ngatwyn, of Indwe, against his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, with custody of the child of the marriage and forfeiture by defendant of the benefits of community. Mr. McGregor was for the plaintiff; the suit was undefended.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Office, produced duplicate copy of the entry.

Elias Ngatwyn, a Tembu, said he was married to his wife in 1890 in Tembuland. They lived together two years; there was one child. At the end of two years his wife ran away with her sister. He went and asked her to come back, but she would not return. Witness also went and spoke to the headman, but his wife would not come back. Witness was now working at Indwe. He desired to have custody of the child of the marriage—a girl.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 31st December, failing which, a rule to issue calling upon her to show cause on the 12th January why a decree of divorce should not be granted, why the plaintiff should not have custody of the child, and defendant be declared to have forfeited the benefits of the marriage in community.

Postea (January 12th, 1905). The rule was made absolute.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

B. S. A. ASPHALT CO. v. { 1904.
CAPE TOWN GAS CO. { Nov. 1st.
" 16th.

Contract—Sale and purchase—
Preferent rights.

The defendants had contracted to supply the plaintiffs with a certain quantity of coal tar per annum at 2d. per gallon. The defendants further agreed to sell all their coal tar to the plaintiffs, over and above the quantity they were bound by contract to deliver at the same price, save and except such small quantities as they might sell to ordinary customers. They had disposed of considerable quantities of coal tar to a certain firm, and the plaintiffs now sued for damages.

Held, that under this contract the Gas Company were entitled to supply only old customers and only the quantity which had been supplied to them during the preceding twelve months.

This was an action brought by the B.S.A. Asphalte Co., carrying on business at Strand-street, Cape Town, and elsewhere, against the Cape Town Gas, Light and Coke Co. for an interdict and £5,000 damages for breach of contract.

The declaration set out that on or about the 18th August, 1903, the plaintiffs and defendants entered into an agreement in writing, in terms of which the defendants undertook to supply the plaintiffs for a period of five years, reckoned from the 1st July, 1903, with a minimum yearly quantity of 80,000 gallons of coal tar, at a price of 2d. per gallon, to be removed by the plaintiffs from the works of the defendants at the rate of not less than 6,500 gallons per month. The defendants further agreed that the plaintiffs should have the right to call for and purchase from the defendants at the said price of 2d. per gallon all the surplus coal tar manufactured by the defendants, over and above the said amount of 80,000 gallons, not disposed of by the defendants to their ordinary customers in small quantities. The defendants further undertook not to supply coal tar in any quantities to companies competing with the plaintiffs. The defendants, in breach of the said agreement, had (a) failed to supply the plaintiffs with 6,500 gallons during October, 1903, and January and February, 1904, though requested to do so by the plaintiffs; (b) failed to supply the plaintiffs, though requested so to do, with the whole of their surplus quantity of coal tar over and above 80,000 gallons per annum, but the defendants had supplied the said coal tar in large quantities to customers other than those who were such at the date of the taking effect of the said agreement; and (c) knowingly supplied coal tar in large quantities to companies competing with the plaintiffs. In consequence of the plaintiffs being unable to obtain sufficient coal tar, they had lost certain contracts, and had been deprived of large profits, having sustained damages in the sum of £5,000.

The plaintiffs claimed:

(a) An interdict restraining the defendants from supplying coal tar in any quantities to any company or persons competing with the plaintiffs.

(b) An interdict restraining the defendants from supplying coal tar to any person, firms, or companies who were not customers of the defendants on the 1st July, 1903, or prior thereto.

(c) An order compelling the defendants to supply the plaintiffs with all surplus coal tar manufactured by them at the rate of 2d. per gallon, whenever the same is required or demanded by the plaintiffs, in terms of the said contract.

(d) £5,000 as and for damages aforesaid.

(e) Alternative relief.

(f) Costs of suit.

The defendants, in their plea, said that the agreement did not bind the company to supply the plaintiff company with coal tar at the rate of 6,500 gallons per month, or any precise rate; but, in point of fact, from the 1st July, 1903, to the 29th February, 1904, the quantity of coal tar supplied under the agreement to the plaintiff company exceeded the average of 6,500 gallons which the plaintiff company had undertaken to remove monthly, and there was no failure, as alleged in the declaration. They admitted that the plaintiff company, on the 12th February, 1904, gave notice to the defendants that they wished to take the whole surplus supply of tar from the works of the Gas Company, both in Cape Town and Woodstock, and they admitted that after such notice, they continued to supply coal tar to a certain customer, Nuttall and Co., who was, in fact, not a customer on or before the 18th August, 1903, and who was, in fact, competing with the plaintiff company, and the defendants admitted that such supply to a firm competing with the plaintiff company was a breach of the agreement aforesaid, in respect of which the defendant company was liable for damages, and they tendered the sum of £225, together with taxed costs to date. Save as aforesaid, they denied the allegations in the declaration. The defendants further undertook not to supply tar in quantities to any but ordinary customers, or to any company or person competing with the plaintiff company, so long as the plaintiff company performed its obligation under the agreement, and the said notice to take the whole supply of surplus tar at 2d. per gallon, and further undertook that they would regard as ordinary customers, in terms of the agreement, only those persons, firms, or companies who were customers on or before the 1st July, 1903. Subject to the said tender and undertaking, the defendants prayed that the plaintiffs' claim should be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiffs, in their replication, said that the tender was incomplete, and referable only to one of the alleged breaches of contract, and, in so far as it applied to the said breach of contract, was wholly insufficient to satisfy the claim in this action. The undertaking of the defendants did not safeguard the interests of the plaintiffs under the agreement.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiffs; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for defendants.

Mr. Buchanan said that the matter had previously been before the Court in the form of a motion for an interdict and an inspection of the books on the 21st March (14 C.T.R., 229) and the Court made an order that the applicants should proceed by action, and that notice thereof should be given to Nuttall and Co. that they might intervene as co-defendants, if so advised; notice of motion to stand for summons, and applicant to have the right to insert a claim for damages in their declaration. Since then Messrs. Nuttall and Co., through their attorneys, had notified that they did not wish to intervene in the case.

Evidence was called for the plaintiffs.

Andrew Allen, managing director of the plaintiff company, said that he had known Mr. Reilly, the manager of the defendant company, for some years. He described the scope of the plaintiff company's business, and mentioned that they had branches in Durban and Johannesburg, both of which had been opened before July, 1903. Mr. Reilly was aware of the purposes of the company. The agreement in question was signed in August, 1903, but they had been in negotiation since August, 1902. The draft agreement had been in the hands of Mr. Reilly; he saw Mr. Reilly hand it to the solicitors. After the agreement had been signed, they had considerable difficulty in obtaining tar from the defendant company. They really required for their works and sales all the coal tar they could get. The demand for the product had increased largely since the plaintiff company started business; in fact, the demand had really sprung up since the plaintiffs began operations. Formerly the tar was dumped on the Woodstock beach by the defendants. The greatest difficulty plaintiffs had was about October and November last year. The plaintiffs supplied proper receptacles for the reception of the tar. He saw Mr. Reilly, and brought pressure to bear upon him. In February of this year, further demands were made upon the defendants. He found that the bulk of the tar was being sold to Messrs. Nuttall and Co. Plaintiffs frequently sent their carts to Woodstock and Cape Town for tar, but were refused any supply, being referred from one place to the other. Nuttalls were using the tar for street pavements. Plaintiffs carried on a similar business, and had also sent in a tender to the City Council for the contracts that were let to Nuttalls. Mr. Reilly said that he had a good many customers, who came to the windows and bought for cash, and he would like to retain those customers. He also said he had supplied the Corporation of Cape Town with a certain amount of coal tar, and would like to continue.

Witness found that the defendants were supplying coal tar to Jenkins and Co., who were competing with the plaintiff company. The only other works in South Africa from whence coal tar could be secured were the gas works at Port Elizabeth and Johannesburg, but both concerns were small in comparison to those of the defendant company. If they could not obtain a supply of coal tar from the gas company, they would be compelled to import. They had to make further complaints in April that the supply was insufficient. Witness also spoke as to the correspondence in regard to the contract, and an interview between the Board of the plaintiff company and the gas company's manager. Since the defendants had filed their plea in August, the supply had increased, but it was not yet as large as plaintiffs desired. They had since been receiving more than the minimum quantity of 6,500 gallons per month. He had seen the books of the defendant company. He had seen what had been charged to Nuttall and Co. The total quantity supplied to Nuttall's between February and July was 31,600 gallons.

By the Court: The plaintiffs were quite prepared to have taken all the quantity of tar supplied by the gas company to Nuttalls. Their works were paralysed because they could not get a sufficient supply of tar.

Their manufactures of goods had been starved through the want of tar. They had articles which were composed of tar costing 6d. per gallon, and other constituents costing about 6d. per gallon. They got for the resultant product 2s. to 2s. 6d. They made from 1s. to 1s. 6d. profit. He could not say how many gallons they ordered during the period February and July; they could have found use for the whole of the quantity supplied to Nuttall's upon their manufactory. He could not give figures, because their books were destroyed during a fire at the works. The plaintiff company had had to import tar from Home at a cost, stacked in Cape Town, of 9d. per gallon. Upon their sales of coal tar they made a profit of from 6d. to 7d. They had lots of orders that they were unable to execute—he should say to the extent of 10,000 gallons. They had had constant inquiries from their Johannesburg branch for a better supply of tar.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The plaintiff company had carried on the manufacture of tar macadam for some time; Nuttall's were working in a similar product to the plaintiffs. The two products were practically the same; the difference was that one could be made by machinery and the other by hand. The tar paving that they both produced was practically the same. The Johannesburg branch of the plaintiff company was opened before the agreement with the defendant company was entered into. He estimated the damage under the head of the Johannesburg branch at £1,000. He estimated that the gas company's make of tar was 16,000 gallons per month; he calculated that their small customers would require 1,000 gallons. He put forward the claim for £5,000 damages in March last. He believed that they had sustained damages in more than that sum. Witness had brought his claim down to the 31st October.

De Villiers, C.J., put it to counsel whether it would not simplify matters if they confined their attention to the 31,600 gallons supplied to Nuttall's.

Mr. Schreiner acquiesced.

Mr. Buchanan said that it would certainly simplify matters, but he did not think that would be a fair test of the damages sustained by the plaintiffs.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the plaintiffs would only be entitled to damages up to the 12th July.

Witness, in further cross-examination, said that the plaintiff company was not paying a dividend, nor had it yet declared a dividend. He could give the profits on the manufactures. The business would have been profitable had it not been for other people getting the tar the plaintiffs should have had. He did not know who, besides Nuttalls, had been receiving from the Gas Company tar which the plaintiffs should have had. Their contention was that they were to have the first call on the supply. He did not know that the agreement was that the Asphalt Company were to be supplied by the defendants with surplus tar after the ordinary customers had been supplied. Before the contract was entered into, he did not know that the Gas Company were supplying other large customers, beside those who were being dealt with at the window. He was only aware of one customer of that class, the Cape Town Corporation. He was not aware that the Table Bay Harbour Board, the Railway Department, and Forrest and Co. were customers of that class. He understood that "small quantities" only referred to the people to whom sales were made at the window. Mr. Reilly told him that they could get larger prices for the small quantities sold at the window, 6d. or 8d. a gallon, and that he would like to retain those customers. Witness, before he floated the present company, negotiated with Mr. Reilly as the head of the B.S.A. Asphalt and Vulcanite Roofing Company. Witness had made a mistake in saying that they imported coal tar from England; they had only obtained pitch, or distilled tar from England. He believed they had imported 10 tons of pitch, the cost being about £4 a ton. He reckoned that 1,000 gallons of tar would distil four tons of pitch. They were not importing pitch independently of the insufficient supply of coal tar by the defendants.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that unless the case were completed that day, the further hearing would have to be adjourned until next term. The Court would be unable to give another day during the present term. He also thought that it would perhaps materially facilitate the hearing if, at the conclusion of the witness's evidence, the Court determined the construction of the agreement.

At the conclusion of the witness's evidence, counsel were heard in argument as to the construction of the agreement.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the view he took of the contract was, firstly, that the defendants may not supply coal tar to any persons, firms, or companies who were not customers of the defendants during the twelve months preceding the 1st July, 1903; and, secondly, that the defendants may not supply any such customer during any twelve succeeding months beginning with the 1st July, with any quantity exceeding the quantity supplied to such customer during the twelve months preceding the 1st July, 1903. The parties might proceed on the basis of that opinion. The only other question now was the amount of damages. It had been clearly proved that, as to 31,600 gallons, supplied to Nuttall and Co., there was a breach of contract. The main question would be whether it should be on basis of 1s. profit, which would make £1,500? If the rate were reduced, of course, the damages would be reduced proportionately.

Mr. Schreiner said that the defendants took the figure at 2d. simply because they had sold the tar to Nuttalls at 4d.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Twopence seems very low.]

Mr. Schreiner said he admitted that the sum of £225 would be insufficient, and his learned friend and himself might perhaps be able to arrive at a figure between that sum and £1,500. He contended, however, that there was no reason for interdicting the defendants.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am inclined to think that 6d. per gallon would be a fair measure of damages. That would be equivalent to £790.]

Mr. Buchanan (after consulting with his clients) said that they were willing to take the rate of 6d. The only point was whether his lordship confined the rate to the quantity supplied to Nuttalls.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, no; the total damages claimed in this action.]

Mr. Buchanan: At the rate of 6d. per gallon on whatever amount may be assessed?

De Villiers, C.J.: It is only a suggestion. We have only had evidence in regard to the 31,600 gallons supplied to Nuttalls. I think perhaps the best plan would be to go on with the case. Mr. Schreiner does not accept the figure. The evidence may be continued with reference to the profit that would have been made by the plaintiffs if they had been supplied with this coal tar, and to the customers whom the defendants supplied contrary to the agreement.]

Mr. Buchanan then proceeded to call further evidence.

Harry George Davis, secretary of Asphalt Company, denied that his firm had ever had regular supplies from the defendants. From January to June about 48,000 gallons had been delivered to them.

To the Court: He maintained that the 31,000 gallons sold to Nuttall and Co. were worth at least 10d. a gallon to them, in addition to what they were paying for it.

Witness (continuing) said that owing to the defendant's failure they had lost two very good customers in Johannesburg, who were now using imported tar. His firm made a profit varying from 6d. to 8d. per gallon on the tar sold in Johannesburg. They used to supply these customers with 4,000 gallons per month.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Under their contract they were supposed to get 80,000 gallons of tar yearly, and any surplus they had if necessary. All his company wished to know was when the defendants were selling. Witness complained that his firm was not getting a sufficient supply. Witness heard that the defendants were manufacturing for a competing firm, and supplying them with tar, so he then wrote to them, complaining of the act. Witness contended that his firm lost the two customers in Johannesburg owing to the failure of the defendants to carry out their contract. He denied that he lost them because they could import the tar from Delagoa Bay cheaper than from Cape Town. Certainly the freight rate was lower, but delivery was very uncertain. The company were at present selling the tar at 3d. per gallon, but it would fetch 6d. per gallon if put on the market. Witness's company had not paid any dividend up to the present.

Re-examined: Witness could put in a paper which contained the secrets of the manufacture of asphalt, but it would give away their business secrets.

George Sorrie, clerk in Mr. J. E. P. Close's office, stated he examined the books owned by the defendants at the instance of the plaintiff. He put in a list of the quantity of tar supplied to plaintiffs and to other firms. Witness made out a list of those who were not customers before July, 1903.

Alfred E. Ruthford, manager of the Johannesburg branch of the plaintiff business, stated they got all their tar from the Cape Town office. They were not able to get a sufficient supply. They made 6d. per gallon profit in Johannesburg.

Mr. Schreiner objected to evidence of what the firm did in Johannesburg being given. The contract simply stated that the agreement was between the Asphalt Company trading in Cape Town, it should have stated, and Johannesburg.

De Villiers, C.J., overruled Mr. Schreiner's objection, and stated it was the same as if a man with a business in Cape Town called his agent from elsewhere to prove his business was suffering through a certain thing.

Witness (continuing) said he had to account to the Cape Town branch for all the money he received. Witness considered he could sell 4,000 gallons of tar per month in Johannesburg. He had to pay 6d. per gallon for 2,000 gallons at Port Elizabeth, and 1s. 6d. per gallon for a small quantity at Johannesburg, so as not to disappoint his customers.

Cross-examined: A gallon weighed about 14 lb. Witness paid 3d. and 10 per cent. per gallon for tar in Cape Town. There was no contract between the Cape Town branch and the Johannesburg branch. He denied that the Johannesburg branch kept any profit over 3d. per gallon. Cape Town office benefited by any profit.

Charles Holliday, manager to Messrs. Flower and Son, stated that it would cost 8d. per gallon to import tar from England.

Cross-examined: Witness had seen the tar produced by defendants. They did not import that sort. They imported "refined" tar, and manufactured it into another product. They used to buy from the defendants. They then paid 3d. per gallon.

Re-examined: They sold the Gas Company's tar at 1s. per gallon.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

For the defence,

Edward P. Reilly, general manager of the defendant company, stated he was thoroughly conversant with the work of his company. When witness undertook to supply Nuttalls he did not know the agreement existing with plaintiffs. Witness did not regard Nuttalls as a competing firm with plaintiffs. Witness continued to supply Nuttall until the 12th July, when he took advice from counsel, and made the tender mentioned. Witness was annoyed with the plaintiffs for going to law, as he thought the case could have been settled outside the court. Witness had had the figures with regard to the supply of coal tar from July, 1903, to date made out, and put in. The defendants supplied Nuttalls with large quantities of tar during April, May, June, and July. He tendered plaintiffs £225, which he considered was a very fair price. None of the purchasers had paid over 4d. per gallon. There was no contract for supplying it. It was impossible to sell large quantities of tar at 1s. per gallon. Small quantities, such as a gallon, might fetch that price. It was erroneous to say that 9d. per gallon profit could be made on 31,600 gallons in Cape Town. The larger the quantity taken the less was the price per gallon demanded for it. If witness had the 80,000 gallons of tar put aside for defendants he would supply anybody that wanted the surplus.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Witness denied that he wrote asking for a copy of the contract.

Mr. E. P. Reilly was further cross examined: He held that 6,500 gallons was in accordance with the agreement with the plaintiffs. There was no arrangement for the plaintiffs to remove any surplus at the end of the month. In 1903-4 the Town Council received 39,000, and the year previous only 19,000 more were supplied. It was not the case that he was trying to keep down the supply to the plaintiffs. He believed the plaintiffs should get any surplus after all the customers had been served.

Ernest Roberts, local manager for Peabody and Co., New York, said his firm would quote 22s. 14d. per barrel of 50 gallons c.i.f. New York.

Cross-examined: They had just recently gone into the question on account of a shortage of tar at the Cape.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Postea (November 16).

De Villiers, C.J., after referring to two of the most important clauses in the contract, said in his opinion the contract meant the purchase out and out by the plaintiff company of 80,000 gallons of coal tar during every year at the rate of 2d. per gallon, reserving the right to the plaintiff company in addition to that to call for at similar prices whatever additional coal tar there might be after the ordinary customers in small quantities had been supplied. It was difficult to decide exactly what small quantities meant, and only a relative meaning could be given to the term. He thought what was meant by it was that the Gas Company could supply their old customers, but with not more than had been supplied during the preceding twelve months. The Court would declare "that so long as the plaintiff company performs its obligation under the agreement attached to the declaration, and under the notice given by the plaintiff company to the defendant company to take the whole supply of surplus coal tar the defendant company is not entitled to supply coal tar to any persons, firms, or companies that were not customers to the plaintiff company during the twelve months preceding the 1st July, 1903, and that the defendant company is not entitled to supply such customers during any successive twelve months beginning with the 1st July, with any quantity exceeding a quantity supplied to such customers respectively during the twelve months preceding the 1st July, 1903. On the question of damages he thought it would be fair to allow the plaintiff company 6d. on 31,600 gallons, and judgment would be entered for £790, with costs, including £10 expenses for Mr. Sorrie, as an expert accountant.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Herold and Gie; Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte DE VILLIERS. { 1904.
Nov. 1st.

Mr. Burton applied as a matter of urgency on behalf of the applicant for an order restraining any more goods being sold from the shop of one Charles Budricks. Counsel stated that applicant was the secretary of the Dutch Reformed Church, Adderley-street, and, as such, entered into a contract of three years with Budricks for the letting of the premises attached to the church at an annual rental of £660. Since July no rent had been received, and the stock was now being sold by public auction.

An interdict was granted restraining respondent from disposing or removing any more goods until the rent was paid, with leave to the respondent to move to have the interdict set aside.

TRIAL CAUSE.

TOUCHER V. OOSTHUIZEN. { 1904.
Nov. 1st.
" 2nd.

Sale and purchase—Suitability of goods supplied for a specific purpose.

This was an action to recover from the defendant, a farmer, residing at Steynsburg, in the district of Albert, £238 15s. 1d., balance of account for work and labour done.

The declaration set out the plaintiff carried on business in Cape Town, and elsewhere in the Colony, as a water borer and waterworks engineer, and the defendant was a farmer residing at Steynsburg, in the district of Albert. The plaintiff claimed £238 15s. 7d., the balance of account incurred between January 30, 1903, and 31st January, 1904, for certain plant supplied at the defendant's request. Certain material the defendant objected to, the plaintiff was always ready and willing to receive back and allow credit to the amounts of £24 10s. and £5 1s. 3d.

The plea set out that when the defendant entered into the contract with the plaintiff through Carlo Toucher, it was agreed to purchase certain machinery for the purpose of pumping water, and the plaintiff guaranteed that a 4-inch pump would raise the water to a height of 25 feet. An oil engine was also purchased, and guaranteed to work the pump. Defendant, relying on the guarantee, paid £232 2s. on account. After the plaintiff's engineer had fixed the machinery, it was found wholly incapable of delivering the water according to the contract. The plaintiff sent defendant another pump, but it brought no better results, and the whole machinery was, therefore, useless and unserviceable to the defendant. Instead of supplying the defendant with kerosene the plaintiff supplied him with an explosive oil, which was also useless to the defendant. The defendant was willing to return the articles on the terms specified in the declaration. For a claim in re-convention, the defendant claimed repayment of £232 2s., which had been paid to the plaintiff on account, and by reason of the breach of contract he had suffered damage to the extent of £500.

The replication denied that the plaintiff guaranteed at the time that the said centrifugal pump would raise a 4-inch stream of water 25 feet. The defendant required the stream raised 8 feet, and when the pump was found to be unsatisfactory, plaintiff tendered to receive it back. Plaintiff asserted that the second pump was all right.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Alexander) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Rainforth) was for the defendant.

Mr. Upington submitted that the onus lay on the defendant to establish a special contract.

Maasdorp, J., said it seemed there was a dispute about the contract, and without deciding about the onus, it might be as well to go on with the plaintiff's case.

Garibaldi Toucher, plaintiff, stated that he was in England when the purchases were made, his brother Charles managing the business during his absence. A 4 h.-p. Crossley oil engine would raise water 8 feet in 1,200. The engineer he sent to fix up the machinery was a competent man.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He knew nothing about the purchase of this particular engine. The pump, as far as it was concerned, was capable of lifting the water 25 feet. The defendant wrote complaining that the engine could not do the work, and the engineer reported that the engine was working to its utmost capacity, but it did bring the water up.

Carlo Toucher, brother of the plaintiff, said that in July last year the defendant came to witness, and stated that he wanted to purchase a pump for four-inch piping. The defendant seemed to have a doubt of the efficiency of the pump, and witness explained that by suction it could raise water 25 feet, and by force an additional 40, but witness pointed out the higher the elevation, the greater horse power would be required. The defendant said the water would have to be brought about 1,200 feet, and there would not be a greater elevation than 8 feet. Witness found 2½ h.-p. would about do the work, and suggested a 4 horse-power engine. Then the defendant agreed to purchase the engine, pump, and piping. Witness never guaranteed 25 feet. Benzine was sent by error to the defendant, instead of kerosene. When witness went in company with another engineer to see the engine and pump, it was apparently in good order, but they could not test the machinery, as the pipes were disconnected. The defendant was present at the time, and said that he had told witness that the height was 12 feet, and not 8 feet. The defendant said that he was only dissatisfied with the engine.

Cross-examined: He would admit, as matters were at present, the engine could not do the work in a satisfactory manner. Witness said to the defendant that no pump was really capable of drawing water by suction more than 25 feet. The defendant never mentioned 12 or 15 feet when the purchase was being made; he was positive that 8 feet would be ample.

[By Maasdorp, J.: If he had been told that a 12 feet elevation was required, he would probably have given a five h.-p. engine.]

Chas. Richard Jones, mechanical fitter, and engineer, who fitted the engine on the instructions of the plaintiff on defendant's farm, said that the place where the engine was placed was selected by the defendant. It was found, when the second pump was sent out that the engine was not powerful enough, although it did deliver water. On returning to the farm at a later date, he found that the governor of the engine had been altered, and there was too much oil in the engine, which impaired its power.

Cross-examined: The engine was not strong enough to do the work.

Arthur Pengarry, qualified engineer and partner in the firm of Davis, Anderson and Co., who examined the machinery on defendant's farm, stated the oil engine of four horse-power was an efficient engine, but someone had been tampering with the governor. Both engine and pump had been fixed properly. If the pump had been required to raise water 25 feet a 9 h.-p. engine would be required.

Cross-examined: The 9 horse power for 25 feet was practical, and a 6 horse power would be required for 15 feet, a 4½ horse power or 5 horse power for 12 feet, and a 3 horse power for 8 feet.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Frederick Oosthuizen, brother of the defendant, stated that at the interview respecting the purchase, the defendant gave the depth at not more than 15 feet. The plaintiff said the pump could not suck for more than 25 feet. The plaintiff was quite confident that the machine could work at 400 yards, and that the engine was strong enough to work a 6-inch centrifugal pump.

Cross-examined: Witness was satisfied that the pump could suck water at 25 feet. The plaintiff guaranteed to deliver the water at a distance of 400 yards, otherwise witness would not have told his brother to purchase the machinery. He was quite sure that his brother gave the height as from 12 to 15 feet.

A. Oosthuizen, defendant, stated that the plaintiff suggested to him that he should buy an oil engine instead of a windmill. Witness showed plaintiff a diagram, and the latter replied that a 4½ h.p. engine would deliver the water. The lands he wanted to irrigate were 400 yards off. From the first day, Jones erected the engine, he said that it was not strong enough to do the work. He had had no benefit whatever from the machinery. He never touched the engine from the time Jones was there on the second occasion.

Cross-examined: All that was required was a stronger engine. Plaintiff guaranteed the machinery to deliver a 4-inch stream of water 400 yards, but did not guarantee to pump the water with an elevation of 25 feet.

H. Oosthuizen, son of the defendant, stated that the second pump delivered about half an inch of water, and when the pipes were altered they obtained two inches of water. The engine did not work satisfactory. None of the water delivered by the machinery was used by his father for irrigating the land.

William Fraser, mechanical engineer, stated that he inspected the water machinery at defendant's farm. He started the pump, which was pumping about 80 gallons a minute. The engine was then doing its utmost. The pump should deliver about 180 gallons. The whole trouble was through the engine not being powerful enough. He considered the engine should be a 10 h.p. one at least.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdrop, J., said the case was not free from difficulty, because it had been placed before the Court as if all depended upon the credibility of the evidence. He was inclined to think that the case could be disposed of without reflecting upon any particular witness. The whole case depended upon the finding of the Court as to the height to which the water was to be led. On the one side it was stated to be about 8 feet, and on the other side from 12 to 15 feet. The defendant left the decision of the capacity of the pump wholly to the plaintiff, because defendant had not enough experience to know what was required. He considered that Toucher had not treated the matter in a careful manner, but more in a casual manner. He took it that the men who knew the country would hardly make such a great mistake as 8 feet when everyone else, after a casual observation, saw that it was 15 feet. That he thought must be taken to dispose of the case. He thought he must find that the people represented to Toucher that they wanted something that would certainly lift water more than 12 feet. Toucher did not supply it, whether by mistake or otherwise it did not matter to the defendant. The result was that the defendant purchased certain material, and the material and the engine were not satisfactory. The engine would have to be taken back. That was all the Court could say at present, and he could only hold that the defendant was not liable to pay for the engine and certain other small items because they were not up to the requirements of the contract.

The result is judgment must be given for the plaintiff for the sum of £70 11s. 2d. on the claim in convention, and for £14 for the claim in reconvention. As to the question of costs, under the circumstances both parties must pay their own.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Defendants Attorneys: Herold and Gie.]

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. } 1904.
BAILEY. } Nov. 2nd.

In this matter, Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Howel Jones), was for the plaintiffs; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the defendant, Hyman Bailey.

Mr. Schreiner said that a consent paper had been signed, in terms of which he now moved for judgment. The case was one in which the Government was suing Bailey, who was convicted of theft some time ago at the Paarl Circuit Court, of certain goods which had been taken by him, under circumstances he (counsel) need not detail, from Lady Grey Bridge Station. A large quantity of goods were, after search had been made, seized, certain of them had been immediately identified as stolen, and a very large number of indictments were preferred against Bailey, and upon certain counts he was convicted, and on other counts he was not convicted. He was at present serving his sentence. The action was brought by the Government for the whole of the goods in relation to which they had paid claims amounting to £600, and they claimed also the sum of £130 odd for the expenses connected with the identification of goods. It was a large seizure, and a long criminal inquiry took place. To the claim of the plaintiffs, the defendant pleaded an admission of his liability in relation to those goods represented by the counts of the indictment upon which he had been convicted, and which he said amounted to £423. He did not admit liability for the costs and expenses involved by identification, and he pleaded that the Government must deduct the whole of the costs in relation to which he had been convicted before claiming against him for the money they had paid to persons who had lost their goods. In his plea he made a tender of £450, with taxed costs to that date. He then claimed in reconvention that amongst the goods seized by the Government were a quantity belonging to him, and of the value of £800, and that these goods had been withheld, and he claimed return of the goods, or their value, £800, and damages in the sum of £150 for wrongful seizure of the goods. The Magistrate at the Paarl had been interdicted from parting with the goods of the defendant, pending the present proceedings, the defendant having desired to get back the goods on which he had not been convicted. The goods were still in the hands of the Government. The basis of the present settlement was embodied in a consent paper in the following terms: "That judgment be entered for the plaintiffs in the sum of £500, with taxed costs, such costs not to exceed £100, upon the understanding that such of the goods removed from the defendant's premises as are now in the possession of the Railway Department be returned to the defendant upon payment of the said sum of £500 and costs." Counsel added that it was quite understood that though no special reference was made to the claim in reconvention, this was a settlement of the whole case, both the claim in convention and the claim in reconvention.

Judgment was entered in terms of the consent paper, the understanding being that this disposed of the whole case.

ELLIS V. KEMP.

This was an action brought by J. D. Ellis and Son, auctioneers, East London, King William's Town, and elsewhere, against John Hilton Kemp, of Cathcart, for the return of certain goats and hameles, or their value, £502 1s. Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Benjamin) was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defendant.

Hopley, J., said he wished to be quite satisfied as to the reason why the defendant was not present.

Mr. McGregor said he was unable at the moment to produce the service of summons, but would be ready to do so at a later stage.

Hopley, J., pointed out that this was not quite all that was wanted. Here was a comparatively big case. The briefs were voluminous, eminent counsel had been engaged, and at the last moment the defendant was not present.

The defendant was called in each court, but did not answer.

Mr. McGregor said that Sir Henry Juta had been briefed for the defence, and the representative of a firm of attorneys, who was in court, was doubtful whether his firm had or had not the case in hand. He thought they had not, but was not quite sure.

Eventually the case proceeded on Mr. McGregor undertaking to produce the necessary certificate of service.

The declaration set out that on the 30th January last plaintiff sold to defendant by auction at Dohne, district of Stutterheim, certain goats and hameles for £502 1s. The conditions of sale were, purchasers must take possession of their stuff as soon as knocked down at their own risk, and to purchasers up to a certain figure three months' credit would be given. Defendant saw plaintiff before the sale, and plaintiff promised that on an approved bill he would sell to him. After the sale defendant did not give plaintiff an approved bill. Subsequently, defendant sent a bill, or notes, signed only by himself. Thereafter, defendant, in breach of his duty as custodian, had certain of the stock sold by auction, and had the proceeds placed to his credit. Thereafter, defendant, when undergoing preliminary examination on a charge of theft, tendered the sum of £502 1s. by a note signed by him only. The prosecution was subsequently withdrawn. Plaintiff claimed return of the goats and hameles, or their value, £502 1s.

Defendant, in his plea, said the only condition on which he bought, was that he should have three months' credit. He gave plaintiff a promissory note. He was still ready, and tendered to pay the sum of £502 1s. For a claim in reconvention, he said that he suffered damages through the wrongful act of the plaintiff in causing him to be prosecuted and imprisoned, and he claimed £1,000 damages and return of the promissory note, offering to pay plaintiff the sum of £502 1s.

John David Ellis (the plaintiff) said that on the 13th January he sold some stock under his usual conditions of sale, which were read out at the sale. Defendant saw him about buying stock, and purchased 411 lamels and 125 goats, the price being £502 1s. No part of the money had been paid. The stock was duly handed over to the defendant.

By the Court: He did not properly accept the bill given by the defendant. He had kept the bill, because he thought the defendant was coming down to make a settlement. Witness was away at the time, and on his return from East London, he told his clerk to send back the bill to be endorsed. The bill had not been met. At the preliminary examination cash was offered by the defendant.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose it was not accepted because it would have looked like a malicious prosecution?]

Mr. McGregor: Yes, I take it that that is so.

[Hopley, J.: What about the claim in reconvention?]

Mr. McGregor: We shall apply to your lordship for absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention. Counsel applied for judgment as prayed on the claim in convention, and absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, and for an order for the plaintiff's expenses as a necessary witness.

Judgment was entered for the plaintiff on the claim in convention, as prayed, with costs, and absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, with costs, plaintiff to be allowed his personal expenses.

FLEMING V. COMMINS.

Verbal lease—Principal and agent—Pleading—Estoppel.

C. had entered into a lease of certain premises to F. verbally. C. afterwards refused to execute a written lease, embodying the same terms. In an action to compel C. to execute this lease, or for damages, it was argued that F. was merely an agent.

Held (1) That C. was bound by the verbal lease. (2) That F.'s agency should have been specially pleaded, and (3) That this not having been done, C. was now estopped from denying that F. was a principal.

This was an action brought by Charles Henry William Fleming, accountant,

Cape Town, against Michael Commins, property owner, Wynberg, for an order requiring defendant to give possession of certain premises, and to sign and execute a certain lease, and also for damages.

The declaration set out that on or about the 23rd July last the defendant agreed to let him have certain premises situate in Sligo-terrace, Prestwich-street, Cape Town, on lease, and that he agreed to embody the terms in a written lease. Instructions were given to Mr. F. B. Andrews, attorney, to draw up a form of lease. The lease was drafted by Mr. Andrews, but the defendant had failed and neglected to sign and execute the lease. Plaintiff tendered for his part to sign the document. By reason of the defendant's said refusal, plaintiff said he had sustained damages in the sum of £500, which the defendant refused to pay. Plaintiff claimed an order directing the defendant to give him possession of the premises, and to sign and execute the lease, and also judgment for £500 damages. As an alternative, if defendant would not sign and execute the lease, plaintiff prayed for judgment for £2,000 damages.

The defendant, in his plea, said that the agreement was not binding or valid; he denied having instructed Mr. Andrews to prepare a lease, and also said that the draft did not correctly set out the terms to which he was prepared to agree, and that he was justified in refusing to sign the document. He denied that the plaintiff had sustained damage, and prayed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff; Mr. D. Buchanan (in the absence of his leader, Mr. Upington) was for the defendant.

Evidence was called in support of the claim.

Charles Henry William Fleming (the plaintiff) said that in July of this year he was approached by the Federal Cold Storage Company, and in consequence went to the defendant and saw him at his house. Witness asked Mr. Commins for a lease of the corner shop in Sligo-terrace. Commins said he had entered into a lease from the 1st September last; Commins said he was sorry that he had let the shop to Violet, because he would have liked the Federal Company as tenants. Violet, witness believed, was a compositor in the employ of the "Cape Times," and was proposing to carry on a butchery business. Commins agreed to let him the shop near by, which had been occupied by Logan Bros. Witness gave instructions to Mr. Andrews to prepare the lease. Defendant was present. Mr. Andrews took a note of the points of the proposed lease. It was arranged that they should again attend before Mr. Andrews on the following Monday. Mr. Commins then went to see his attorney, Mr. T. J. O'Reilly, who said that he would not permit Mr. Commins to let his place, because he could not legally do so, owing to his having already let the corner shop to a butcher. Mr. O'Reilly said that he would be agreeable to the defendant signing, if witness would become responsible for both shops in the event of one becoming vacant. Witness saw Mr. Verster, managing director of the Federal Co., who insisted on the lease being adhered to. Commins afterwards told witness that he would let witness have the shop as he had originally agreed. Upon witness calling at Mr. O'Reilly's office, Mr. O'Reilly refused to give up the key, and the defendant then returned to his old contention that witness should become responsible for both shops in case the corner shop should become vacant. Witness still desired the lease, so that he could transfer it to the Federal Co., for whom he was acting. He was to be paid £30, plus out-of-pocket expenses for preparation of lease, if the transaction had gone through. He had been verbally notified by the Federal Co. that they claimed damages against him; they looked to witness for damages in the sum of £2,500.

By the Court: Witness would have received £30 from the Cold Storage Co. The Cold Storage had threatened to claim damages against him.

[Hopley, J.: How can they claim damages against you when you were simply their agent? Your taking the lease was simply a subterfuge or a blind for the Federal?]

Witness did not reply.

Mr. Gardiner said that the plaintiff was the principal on the form of the lease, and he had undertaken to transfer to the Federal.

Witness (in answer to the Court) said that the Federal subsequently took a shop in the same neighbourhood.

[Hopley, J.: How did the Federal suffer? Did their meat go bad?]

Witness said that the Federal did not obtain another shop until some time afterwards, and that was given up, because it was found to be beyond the region of trade. Continuing, he said that the defendant then saw the difficulty of having two shops in the same business. Commins saw Mr. Verster upon witness's introduction, and it was agreed that the Federal should be given a lease of the shop, the lease to be in witness's name. Witness prepared a memo., to which Commins agreed. This memo. set out that the lease should be for two years, with option of renewal for a further two years, at £12 a month, and if at any time desired, dwelling at an additional £5 per month, Fleming to have power to transfer lease or sub-let at his discretion, in the event of the corner shop occupied by Violet becoming vacant. Fleming was to have the right to transfer his tenancy on payment of an extra £1 per month.

Cross-examined: Witness took the second shop on behalf of the Federal. He was paid one guinea commission for obtaining that shop. He supposed the difference in the fees was due to the fact that the shops were of a very different character.

By the Court: The Federal were particularly anxious to have one of the shops in Sligo-terrace. Witness had no written instructions; he was given instructions verbally by Mr. Verster, the managing director of the Federal. It was usual to engage an agent to obtain leases in this way. Mr. Verster offered him a sum of £30 if he would obtain a lease of the shop.

Further cross-examined: Mr. Commins did not tell him before the lease was agreed upon that his agent was Mr. O'Reilly. He did not say that he would have to see Mr. O'Reilly before he let the shop. The conditions of the proposed lease were read over by Mr. Andrews to the defendant, who signified his assent.

By the Court: The shop in Sligo-terrace would have been valuable to the Federal, because it was near the Docks.

Re-examined: Commins actually agreed to give a lease in the terms embodied in the written lease. The lease in Napier-street was only for two months.

Frederick B. Andrews, attorney, said that on Saturday morning, the 23rd July, the plaintiff and defendant came to his office, and said they wished to have a lease drawn. Witness prepared notes; both men were present, and he supposed they both spoke.

R. J. Verster, a director of the Federal, said that the first tenant of the shop had been a customer of the company, and when he left, witness instructed the plaintiff to obtain the shop for the company, or get the other shop at once, to enable him to get a start of Violet, who was opening the corner shop. Witness had informed the plaintiff that the company would want damages from him.

Hopley, J., said that the company could not obtain damages against their agent for doing his best in their interests.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Michael Commins (the defendant) said that the hitch in the negotiations in regard to one of the clauses in the lease prevented him from going forward with it. He did not like to let the shop to a butcher, when he had already let the corner shop to another butcher.

Cross-examined: He was agreeable to sign the lease on the terms as he understood them to be jotted down by the plaintiff. The shop was still untenanted, and if the Court decided that he must give a lease, he would be prepared to do so immediately.

Thomas Joseph O'Reilly, agent for the defendant, said that Verster called to see him prior to any negotiations with Violet, and asked witness if he could let the shop to him, or give him the refusal. On the Saturday morning in question he saw the defendant, who informed him that he had let the shop to the Federal. Witness told him he should not have let the shop for a similar class of business to that for which Violet had taken the corner shop. On the following Monday Mr. Commins told the plaintiff that he would not let the shop to him unless the plaintiff would be responsible for both shops in case he transferred the tenancy. Witness claimed the right of drawing up the lease, as the agent of Mr. Commins. Mr. Fleming agreed to this.

Cross-examined: He had no knowledge that Mr. Andrews had already been instructed to draw up the lease.

Mr. Gardiner intimated that the charge for the preparation of the lease was erroneously stated to be £3 11s. 6d. The correct charge was £1 11s. 6d.

Mr. Verster (re-called by the Court) said that the Federal were still prepared to take the premises, and to pay the plaintiff £30 if they got possession, though he thought there should be some reduction, inasmuch as the company had suffered damage through not getting the premises at the time.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said it seemed perfectly clear that the contract was entered into by the parties, and that there was no misunderstanding in the matter. The parties seemed to have agreed on the Friday, when they first met; it did not need any writing or anything else to make it a completed contract. He thought there was no doubt, when one had heard the evidence of the plaintiff, that Mr. Commins perfectly well understood what he was doing, and that he agreed with the plaintiff, before he consulted Mr. O'Reilly, to let these premises. They had the written notes, taken at the time, of what that agreement was, and the agreement had been correctly set forth in the document attached to the declaration which the plaintiff now claimed that the defendant should sign and give effect to. But it had been argued for the defendant that Fleming was merely an agent, and could not now be suing as the principal. But for purposes of their own and to save appearances the parties agreed that the plaintiff should appear as the principal, and the defendant not wanting it to appear on the lease that he was letting his shop to a rival butcher, treated the plaintiff as the principal. He must hold that the plaintiff must now be treated as the principal. Furthermore, if this point was to be taken, it should have been raised on a special plea in which case there might have been an answer that defendant was estopped by his own conduct from setting up such a plea—but though there had been no pleadings on the point it must be held that the defendant was now estopped from setting up such a defence. In regard to the question of damages, he did not see how the plaintiff had sustained any special damages. The Federal Company were still prepared to pay him £30 if the lease were secured. The order of the Court would be judgment for the plaintiff, that the defendant execute the lease annexed to the declaration and forthwith give possession of the premises to the plaintiff, and that the defendant bear the costs of suit. There would be no order as to damages. Judgment would be for the plaintiff in terms of prayers (a) and (b), and costs of suit.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

KUILS V. UNION-CASTLE STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. Upington (for the defendants) applied for leave to have the evidence of certain officers and others of the steamship German taken on commission. The action (he said) was for damages, through the plaintiff having been bitten on the nose by a boardhound which was being brought out here in the German.

Mr. Gardiner (for the plaintiff) assented to the application, subject to the Commission being extended to the plaintiff's witnesses. The steamer (he said) was not due here until the 28th inst., and the case was not likely to be reached until next term. The plaintiff was suing in forma pauperis.

An order was granted empowering Mr. Giddy to sit as commissioner to take the evidence of such witnesses as the parties may desire to be examined, failing Mr. Giddy, Mr. Lewis to act as commissioner.

VAN DRIEL V. VENTER AND NIEBERG.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis. He reported that he had gone into the papers, and he certified in favour of the application.

The Court granted a rule nisi, calling on the respondents to show cause, on the 14th inst., why the petitioner should not be granted leave, as prayed.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS OF THE ESTATE OOSTHUIZEN.

Mr. De Waal moved for confirmation of the sale of certain property in the division of Colesberg, subject to the purchase of certain property in the Cape Peninsula.

Order granted.

Ex parte TRUSTEES PERSEVERANCE BUILDING SOCIETY OF PORT ELIZABETH V. DAVIS.

Mr. Rainsford moved for leave to attach certain property to found jurisdiction, and for leave to sue defendant by edictal citation, for provisional sentence on certain mortgage bonds, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Plaintiffs were unable to trace the whereabouts of the defendant, who left Port Elizabeth some twenty-one years ago.

Order granted as prayed, rule to be returnable on the 1st February, personal service, failing which, rule to be published twice in each Port Elizabeth paper, and twice in the "Gazette," rule to operate in the meantime as an interdict.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte WHITE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the confirmation of a certain sale by public auction of property at Heidelberg, in the estate of his late father, Albert White, the petitioner, an executor in the estate, being the purchaser.

Order granted as prayed.

DIMDORE V. DIMDORE.

Mr. Alexander (for the plaintiff, Mrs. Dimdore) moved for the appointment of a curator bonis, pending certain action for judicial separation.

Mr. Upington (for the defendant) said that the transaction was an extraordinary one. The defendant was a clothier, carrying on business at Claremont. The parties were married in community, and yet they entered into a deed of partnership in this business. He consented to the present application.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Alfred Newton Foot as curator bonis in the joint estate, with power to carry on the shop business, pending the result of the action, costs to be costs in the cause.

Counsel stated that there was also a motion in the list respecting the payment of certain money to enable plaintiff to proceed with her action, but this was opposed, and would have to be taken on some other day.

SIMCOCKS V. WYNBERG { 194.
LICENSING COURT. { Nov. 2nd.
" 3rd.

Licensing Court—Right of unsuccessful applicant to be heard.

The applicant having been refused a club licence without having had an opportunity of replying to objections: the Court (on review) ordered the Licensing Board to sit again and hear the application on its merits.

Mr. Alexander mentioned this matter, which was an application for the review of certain proceedings of the Wynberg Licensing Court, in refusing to renew the licence of a certain club. The Licensing Court had refused to hear evidence in support of the application for renewal, although the applicant was quite prepared to tender such evidence. Counsel submitted that there were authorities for the procedure now adopted in bringing forward this matter by way of notice of motion. He cited the case of the Cafe Royal, and the petition of Mr. Gother Mann, trustee in the insolvent estate Moss, for an order directing the Cape Town Licensing Court to sit again, and hear an application for renewal of licence.

Hopley, J., said it was alleged that there had been a gross irregularity, and it seemed to him that the procedure adopted by the present petitioner was not correct. It seemed to him to be a matter to which the 190th rule of Court applied.

Counsel having been heard further, Hopley, J., consented to hear the petition.

Mr. Alexander read an affidavit by the secretary of the Union Club, Observatory, who said that the petitioner was the curator, and was authorised to institute the appeal. The inspector of police condemned the club as simply a drinking place, run under the auspices of a wholesale firm of liquor dealers. The Licensing Court declined to hear evidence, and refused to renew the licence. The present application was for a revision of the resolution of the Licensing Court, and a direction that they should sit again, and hear the evidence of the petitioner.

Cur. Adv. Fult.

Postea (November 3).

Hopley, J., said this was a matter in which there was an application for the renewal of a club licence at Observatory. It came before the Licensing Court for the division of Wynberg, and he had before him the records of what happened. All that happened was that the agent for the applicant, who was manager of the club, applied for the renewal. Mr. Advocate Russell opposed, and tendered evidence. The Court decided to hear no evidence, and the application was refused. Apparently the only thing the Licensing Court went on was a document conveying the opinion of one Inspector Wynne, who said that in his opinion it was not a club at all, but a drinking place run under the auspices of a wholesale firm of liquor dealers. It was stated in the petition that the applicant was perfectly ready with his evidence to refute this statement, but apparently was not allowed to lead any evidence. Act 28 of 1883, and the 53rd section, stated that if there was opposition to the renewal of the licence the person objecting should give notice at least two clear days before it came before the Licensing Court. It was clearly intended that the person should not be deprived of a licence without having an opportunity of refuting the statements or objections. In the present case the Licensing Court did not appear to have done this. They disposed of the whole matter without hearing evidence, which was a most improper thing to do. In the present application all the members of the Licensing Board had had notice of it, but none of them had come forward to oppose it. The Act empowered the Court to order them to sit again, and hear the case on its merits. That was the course followed in the case of Moss's Insolvent Estate, and that was the order he felt disposed to make in this case.

Mr. Alexander asked the Court to fix some date for the Court to sit.

His Lordship fixed the date on or before the end of the year.

for him, by contract, on part of an estate acquired by him at K. There was another house on this estate which, at the time of his death, had for two years been and still was in the occupation of a lessee.

Held, in an action by the testator's wife against his executors for a declaration of rights, that the plaintiff was entitled to the free occupation of the estate at K., including the newly-built residence, but not the house occupied by the lessee.

Held further, that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim exemption from the payment of water rates or electric light charges or municipal tenants' rates, but that the estate was liable to pay the Divisional Council rates and the Municipal owners' rates and the necessary expenses to keep the residence in a habitable state of repair and was not entitled to demand from her payment of any rent.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

CROSBIE V. CROSBIE'S EXECUTOR AND ANOTHER. 1904. (Nov. 3rd.)

Will—Construction—Occupation—Legacy—Habitation—Rates and taxes—Rent.

A testator by his will directed as follows: My wife shall, so long as she shall decide to live in and occupy my house and grounds in my occupation at the time of my death, have the right of free occupation of the same." At the time of his death he was living in a hired house at R., but a residence was in course of construction

This was an action arising out of the will of the late Mr. Robert Crosbie, M.L.A., and concerned the rights of the widow in reference to property at Kenilworth left by the testator. The plaintiff was Elizabeth Charlotte Crosbie, the widow, and the defendants were George William Steytler, in his capacity as secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company, as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Robert Crosbie, and Advocate Frederick George Gardiner, in his capacity as curator ad litem to minor Robert Boyd Crosbie, and other minor heirs and legatees under the will of the said Robert Crosbie.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides at Kenilworth, and is the surviving spouse of the late Robert Crosbie, to whom she was married without community of goods.

2. The first defendant, in his capacity as secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company, is the executor testamentary of the estate of the late Robert Crosbie.

3. The second defendant is the curator ad litem appointed by this honourable Court on the 18th May, 1904, to represent the minor Robert Crosbie, who is the sole issue of the aforesaid marriage, and certain other minor children having contingent interests under the will or codicil herein-after referred to.

4. On the 4th December, 1902, the late Robert Crosbie, at Graham's Town, duly executed his last will, and on the 5th May, 1903, at Cape Town, he duly executed a codicil thereto, and he died at Graham's Town on the 16th October, 1903.

5. Copies of the said will and codicil are annexed hereunto, and marked "A" and "B," to which the plaintiff begs to refer.

6. In terms of the said will the testator inter alia directed that the plaintiff should, so long as she should decide to live in and occupy his house and grounds in his occupation at the time of his death, have the right of free occupation of the same, and the use of the enjoyment of the furniture, plate, house linen, pictures, vehicles, horses, and generally all movable effects in and upon the said premises at the time of his death, and that should she at any time decide to leave the said property and live elsewhere, then his executor should take possession thereof and of the said movable effects, and the plaintiff should have no further rights or claims therein or thereto.

7. Before the said 4th December, 1902, the testator acquired certain landed property by certain deeds of transfer, dated 25th April, 1901; 7th May, 1901; 6th February, 1902; 7th February, 1902; 11th March, 1902; and 24th June, 1902, which together formed one continuous estate known as Braehead, situated at Kenilworth, in the Cape Division, and the testator intended to constitute his residence there, and entered into contract for the construction thereon of a house and outbuildings, which were to be completed on or before the 30th July, 1903, and the said house and outbuildings were in course of construction and far advanced towards completion at the date of his death, though not finally completed, and the said landed property with the said house and outbuildings were in the testator's occupation at the time of his death, and constitute, according to the true intent and meaning of his said will, the "house and grounds" mentioned in paragraph 6.

8. At the date of his will and thereafter till his death, the late Robert Crosbie had his home, and together with his said son lived with the plaintiff in a house known as Oak Villa, at Rondebosch, which was not his property, but the plaintiff was the lessee and occupier, and paid rent for the said Oak Villa.

9. At the dates of his will and of his death the testator owned the farm Yarrow mentioned in the will, certain other farms in Bechuanaland, and owned no other landed property save and except Braehead aforesaid.

10. At the said dates the testator had certain furniture and plate, according to an inventory whereof a copy is attached, which was stored by him in a certain coach-house then and still existing on the property known as Braehead, which furniture and plate were procured by him for use in his house there when completed, and is, according to the true intent and meaning of his said will, included in the special directions set forth in paragraph 6 hereof.

11. At the said dates the testator contemplated installing electric light in his house at Braehead when completed.

12. The plaintiff is entitled, according to the true intent and meaning of the testator's will, to claim that she shall be free from all rent, rates (including water rates), or taxes due at any time in respect of the said house and grounds, and from all expenses of repair inside and outside of the said house, and from all expenses of insurance of the house and buildings thereon, and of installing electric light, and from all expenses of upkeep of the said house, buildings, and grounds, and that the said rates, taxes, and expenses shall be borne by the testator's estate, and paid by the first defendant from time to time.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays:

(a) Generally for a declaration of her rights under the said will; and more particularly

(b) For a declaration that the landed property transferred as aforesaid to the late Robert Crosbie constitutes the house and grounds mentioned by him in his will as set forth in paragraph 6 hereof.

(c) For a declaration that, so long as she shall decide to live in and occupy the said house and grounds, the rates, taxes, and expenses referred to in paragraph 12 hereof shall be borne by the testator's estate.

(d) For a declaration that the furniture and plate referred to in paragraph 10 are included in the special directions contained in the will and set forth in paragraph 6 hereof; or that she may have such further or other relief in the premises as to this Honourable Court may seem meet, together with costs of suit.

The plea of the first-named defendant in his capacity as aforesaid, was:

1. The allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 8 are admitted.

2. As to paragraph 6 defendant craves leave to refer to the terms of the will attached to the declaration, for the true meaning or effect of such will.

3. As to paragraph 7: (a) Defendant admits that the said testator acquired certain lots or parcels of land situate at Kenilworth in the Cape Division by the several deeds of transfer enumerated in the said paragraph and that he intended to constitute his residence on a parcel, hereinafter more particularly specified, of the said land, and entered into a contract for the construction thereon of a house and outbuildings to be completed on or before 30th July, 1903, and that the said house and out-buildings were in construction and far advanced towards completion at the date of his death, though not finally completed. Save as above, he denies the allegations in paragraph 7. (b) Defendant, with further reference to paragraph 7, craves leave to refer to a plan of the said lots of land, copy of which is hereto annexed marked "A," and says that the house and outbuildings constructed or to be constructed as aforesaid were to have been and were built on the spot marked "Braehead Residence" and not on that marked "Hillbrow Residence," situate on lot "B," on the said plan, on which latter spot certain buildings had already even before the testator's death been erected and still stand, which buildings with the ground belonging and appurtenant thereto were in existence at the time of the purchase by the testator of the lots or parcels of land aforesaid, and were then and at the date of the said will and prior to the testator's death, and still are, occupied by one Dr. Robertson.

4. In case this Honourable Court should find that the said Braehead residence, with certain ground belonging and appurtenant thereto and used therewith, constitute the house and ground mentioned in paragraph 6 of the declaration, then he respectfully contends that such house and ground does not include the said Hillbrow residence, or lots B and C and 6 and 7 as marked on the said plan, the said ground belonging and being appurtenant to the aforesaid Hillbrow residence and being separated and cut off from the remainder of the aforesaid lots or parcels of land.

5. As to paragraph 9, defendant admits that at the dates of the testator's will and of his death he owned the said farm Yarrow and certain farms in Pechuanaland, and he has no knowledge of any further property owned by the testator, other than the parcels of land described in paragraph 3 (a) hereof.

6. Defendant admits, as to paragraph 10, that at the aforesaid dates the testator had certain furniture and plate, according to the inventory, copy of which is attached to the declaration, but he says that the said furniture and plate was stored in the coach-house attached appurtenant, and belonged to the said Hillbrow residence, occupied as aforesaid, and not to the house now termed "Braehead Residence"; he also admits that the said furniture and plate had been procured by the testator for use in the said Braehead residence when completed. Save as above, paragraph 10 is denied.

7. Defendant has no knowledge of the allegations in paragraph 11, and does not admit them.

8. Should this Honourable Court find that plaintiff is entitled to live in and occupy the said

Braehead residence, and any portion of the aforesaid lots of land, as to which he craves leave to refer to paragraphs 3 and 4 hereof, then defendant respectfully contends that, according to the true meaning and intent of the said will, she is only entitled to claim exemption from the payment of any rent for such use and occupation. Save as above, he denies that plaintiff is in law entitled to claim the several exemptions or to make the several claims specified in paragraph 12, or any of them, or that the testator's estate is liable to pay or provide for the same or any one of them.

Wherefore defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim be throughout dismissed, with costs, and for a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says:

9. He craves leave to refer to the matters and things set out in his plea, and specially to paragraphs 7 and 8 thereof.

10. Should this Honourable Court find that the plaintiff (now defendant) is entitled to live in and occupy any portion of the lots of land referred to in the declaration and the plea (as to which he refers respectfully to paragraph 4 of his plea), he says that, by reason of the premises, he is entitled to a declaration that, save as to the aforementioned exemption from payment of rent in favour of the plaintiff (now defendant), as set out in paragraph 8 of the plea, all rates, taxes, and expenses referred to in paragraph 12 of the declaration and paragraphs 7 and 8 of the plea, in so far as they attach or relate to are connected with or arise out of the aforesaid portion, with the buildings thereon, shall be borne by the plaintiff (now defendant) so long as she shall decide to live in or occupy, or does live in or occupy, the said land and buildings.

Wherefore the first defendant (now plaintiff) claims:

(a) A declaration that all rates, taxes, and expenses referred to in paragraph 10 hereof shall be borne by the plaintiff (now defendant), so long as she shall decide to live in or occupy, or does live in or occupy, the said land and buildings.

(b) Alternative relief.

(c) Costs of suit.

The second defendant filed a similar plea.

The plaintiff in her replication said that it was the intention of the testator to resume possession of Hillbrow, with the coachhouse and grounds as part of Braehead when completed, and it was not his intention to allow any tenancy of Hillbrow to continue after such completion.

Mr. Schreiner (with him Mr. Joubert) for the plaintiff; Mr. McGregor for the first defendant, Mr. Gardiner for the second defendant.

James Jarvis Bisset, surveyor, gave evidence as to the preparation on behalf of the estate of the plan of the Kenilworth property, annexed to the plan. Witnesses described the limits of the estate.

Mr. Schreiner was about to put a question to witness as to whether Dr. Crosbie had told him what his object was in buying other properties abutting on Braehead, when

Mr. McGregor interposed, and objected that such evidence was inadmissible.

Mr. Schreiner said that certain evidence was taken on commission, and a similar objection was then raised by the other side. Counsel submitted that it was of importance that this evidence should be admitted, so that the Court could determine what "my house and grounds" really embraced. Counsel went on to point out that the defendant contended that the words "in occupation at the time of my death" were governing words, and they said that in point of fact Mr. Crosbie, the house not having been completed, was not in occupation. The plaintiff's contention was that, although the contractor was engaged upon the building, Mr. Crosbie was in legal occupation. The contention of the other side was that "occupation" meant residence. Counsel proceeded to quote Bird on the admissibility of evidence, and also quoted the decision of this Court in re Herald ex parte Rademeyer (1 Juta, 158).

[Maasdorp, J., asked counsel whether the argument he was now addressing to the Court also referred to the evidence of Mr. Hutton, taken on commission?]

Mr. Schreiner said that his contention was that the argument applied to both witnesses. Counsel urged that evidence was surely admissible to show what were the testator's grounds, seeing that he used the terms "my house and grounds." He called their lordships' attention to the admission of extrinsic evidence in the case of Breda v. Town Council (9 Juta, 415). He submitted that here they had an ambiguity, and the Court should admit evidence to show the real limits of the property Braehead. Counsel also quoted Maasdorp's Institutes of Cape Law, book 1, cap. 30, p. 195, on the admissibility of extrinsic evidence, and from Voet (35, 1, 4, and 35, 1, 6). He submitted that he was entitled to put to the witness the question: "What was Mr. Crosbie's object, expressed to you, in acquiring that property?" Counsel also referred to the judgment of Lord Cairns in Charter v. Charter (Law Reports 7, House of Lords, p. 364).

[De Villiers, C.J., said that the words of the will were: "I do direct that my wife, Elizabeth Charlotte Crosbie, shall, so long as she shall decide to live in and occupy my house and grounds in my occupation at the time of my death, have the free occupation of the same." At present it had not been shown that there was such a latent ambiguity as to justify the Court in allowing evidence as to statements made by the deceased, more especially statements made in answer to a question as to testator's object in purchasing the property. It was very possible at a later stage that the Court might find it necessary to take some evidence of that kind; but at present he was not satisfied that such evidence was admissible.]

Mr. Schreiner: Then I have no further question to put to the witness.

[De Villiers, C.J., said it seemed to him that the main dispute, after all, was in regard to Braehead. If the plaintiff got Braehead she would have got all that she could really occupy. The plaintiff, of course, would not want to occupy two houses.]

Mr. Schreiner said that it might be the desire of the plaintiff that Hillbrow should be demolished unless it were considered part of Braehead grounds. He admitted that the plaintiff's own interests did not make her anxious to get Hillbrow, but it was important to her that it should not be possible that it might become a trouble or a nuisance to her residing at Braehead. Hillbrow was a cottage that might become an annexe to Braehead, if she so required it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does she wish to occupy it?]

Mr. Schreiner: No; she wishes to reside at Braehead. She is at present in England.

Mr. McGregor informed their lordships that he did not intend to labour the point as to whether the whole of the property was excluded from the plaintiff's occupation. What the executor desired was a judgment of the Court, so that he might know what his duty was.

Witness, in answer to the Court, said that Hillbrow was a small place, and was situated about 20 yards from Braehead. There was at present a low iron fence between the two. He conceived that it might be a very great inconvenience to the occupier of Braehead to have a stranger residing at Hillbrow. He would not say that Braehead would require Hillbrow for the use of servants, but it might be a convenience to have it. He did not think it would have been convenient to the testator, if he had had Hillbrow as an appurtenance to Braehead to have had the stables and coachhouse at Braehead.

Dr. George Watson Robertson stated that he occupied Hillbrow two and a half years ago on a verbal agreement with Mr. Crosbie on a monthly rental. On the 9th July, 1904, he had a letter from the executor of the estate giving him what was practically a yearly lease. When the furniture was stored in the coachhouse he was already in occupation of the house. Witness took a great interest in the building, as he was on very friendly terms with Mr. Crosbie. Witness did not pay tenant rate.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The storing of the furniture was a special arrangement.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. McGregor called,

George Wm. Steytler, executor in the estate, who stated that the Divisional Council rates on the whole property, taking 1904 as a basis, would be £39 0s. 3d. If Hillbrow property was excluded the rates would be £24 odd. Wynberg Municipal rates for the whole property would be £118 11s. 6d., and excluding Hillbrow, £93 11s. 6d. The tenant's rate on Hillbrow would amount to £7 6s. 8d., and the cost of repairs on the whole property after some years would be £50 per annum. The upkeep of Braehead, without ornamental gardening, would amount to £150 per annum.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that what was in Mr. Crosbie's mind when he made his will in 1902 was not Braehead only when he said, "my house and grounds." The mere fact that the house was occupied did not justify his learned friend taking the view that Mr. Crosbie really did not intend to take out Hillbrow, or any portion of the grounds, from his bequest. It was a most extraordinary circumstance that the furniture was stored in the coachhouse if Mr. Crosbie intended to separate Hillbrow from the rest of the property. Mrs. Crosbie might be said to be under an obligation to the estate to maintain and repair it, but counsel submitted the word "free" in the will released her from that, and that while she was not obliged to make repairs she was at liberty to make improvements.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that counsel for the defendants should confine himself to these questions: First of all, whether the whole of the property should not be included, and as to rent, Divisional Council rate, Municipal landlord rate, and such expenses as would be incurred by keeping the house in a habitable state of repair. As to tenants' rates, water rates, etc., counsel need say nothing at all, because, as at present advised, the Court were of opinion that the tenants' rates should be paid by Mrs. Crosbie. That also referred to the electric light. The Court were distinctly of opinion that she should bear that, if she wanted the electric light.

Mr. McGregor, at the outset of his argument, quoted a body of authorities on the question as to whether the occupation of the whole of the property passed to the plaintiff. The point arose whether there was occupation by Mr. Crosbie at the time of his death. There was no specific description, and if the Court were pleased to allow anything to the plaintiff at all it would only be, he submitted, because the Court were satisfied that it was proved as a fact that Mr. Crosbie was in occupation at the time of his death. Then, if that were so, they had to see how far the occupation of Hillbrow by Dr. Robertson affected the question as to whether Hillbrow was included. He submitted that Hillbrow was excluded, because of the very fact of there being a man in occupation at the time. That was important, because occupation alone was what the plaintiff was founding upon.

[Maasdorp, J.: There was occupation of the house.]

Yes and also of the grounds.

[Maasdorp, J.: The witness said that he had no rights in the grounds.]

I did not understand that. Proceeding, counsel said that there was a coachhouse at Brownhead, and the other coachhouse at Hillbrow was not utilised. Nothing could have been simpler than to have stipulated in the contract the breaking down of the cottage if the testator had wished it. There may not have been a definite apportionment of ground, but there was nothing to the contrary. There was no shutting-off of Dr. Robertson from the ground. Again, as far as the will was concerned there was no such place as Braehead. What they had were certain lots of land, not known by any generic name or by any name, as far as they were aware, not known to the locality or to the books of the local bodies. He submitted that occupation must be rigorously construed by the Court. If the Court found for defendants on the section B indicated on the plan on which Hillbrow stood, then they must find for the land marked C 6 and 7. Counsel submitted that the occupation of the coachhouse by Dr. Robertson supported his contention in regard to the occupation.

[Maasdorp, J.: Who was in occupation of the coachhouse at Hillbrow?]

Mr. McGregor: Dr. Robertson. There was an agreement with Dr. Robertson for the storage of furniture. Counsel submitted that the fact of Dr. Robertson being in occupation of the coachhouse supported his contention. He reminded the Court that it was a maxim of law that a man was not presumed to donate. He called attention to the express character of the terms of the will, and urged that it was a fair argument and a proper argument that those facts set out definitely in the will exhausted the extent of the testator's liberality, and that was enough in plain English to satisfy the meaning of those words.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Very well, now; rent surely you cannot claim?]

No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then as to the Divisional Council rates?]

Mr. McGregor urged that the will was explicit in its terms, and that if it had been intended that the plaintiff's rates for this property should have been borne by the estate then the will would have contained an express direction.

De Villiers, C.J., said he gathered from the defendants' counsel that he contended that this was an habitatio rather than usufruct.

Mr. McGregor said that was so. In regard to the Municipal rates, he submitted that the owner's rate would fall, roughly speaking, under the same category as the Divisional Council's rates. As to the repair of the property, he admitted that this was a point of difficulty. The important point, he took it, for the executor was to look after the interests of the estate and the minor. He took it that the executor had two principal duties—firstly, that the property should be kept in its present condition, and secondly, that he should not be called upon, to the injury of the estate, unduly to pay money for the upkeep of the property.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court had used the term "habitable state of repair. Should not the property be kept in a habitable condition?"

Mr. McGregor: The executor quite accepts that.

Mr. Gardiner said that on behalf of the minors he had no further argument to advance. He submitted, however, that under clause 19 of the building contract it was laid down that until the building contract had been completed and the works handed over—until Mr. Crosbie took over the land from the builder—the builder was in occupation of the land.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out to Mr. Schreiner that a new point had been raised by Mr. McGregor in regard to whether Hillbrow was in the occupation of Dr. Robertson, and if so, whether Hillbrow was not excluded.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the words "in my occupation at the time of my death" covered occupation of Hillbrow. Dr. Robertson was only in temporary occupation, under a light notice of three months; the testator could not have meant to give real occupation to Dr. Robertson and detach Hillbrow from Braehed. The occupation was really in Mr. Crosbie; he had his furniture stored in the coachhouse at Hillbrow. It was a condition of the tenancy that the use of the coachhouse was to be in Mr. Crosbie, but was part of the arrangement between Mr. Crosbie and Dr. Robertson when the latter came in. He had understood Dr. Robertson that the coachhouse was open to Mr. Crosbie's use all along.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the shorthand writer's notes showed that Dr.

Robertson had stated that the furniture was stored in the Hillbrow coachhouse by special arrangement, but no indication was given as to when that arrangement was entered into.

Dr. Robertson (recalled) said that the furniture was placed in the coachhouse when he had been in the house some nine or ten months. A prior arrangement was entered into when he first saw Mr. Crosbie about taking the house. Mr. Crosbie said to witness that he supposed he would have no objection to his (testator) using the coachhouse. Mr. Crosbie had seemed to keep the coachhouse out of the hiring, and had kept the key. Until the furniture was removed from the coachhouse, witness had no use of the coachhouse.

Mr. Schreiner (resuming his argument) said that the whole of the circumstances pointed to the improbability of Mr. Crosbie having contemplated exclusion of the cottage. On the question of rating, counsel quoted Maasdorp's Institutes of Cape Law (Book 2, cap. 21, pp. 165 and 166), and also Vinnius and Voet. As to rating, he called their lordships' attention to the Municipal Act and the Divisional Council Act of 1889.

De Villiers, C.J.: The main question to be decided in this case is the true meaning of the following words in the will of the testator: "I do direct that my wife, Elizabeth Charlotte Crosbie, shall, so long as she shall decide to live in and occupy my house and grounds in my occupation at the time of my death, have the right of free occupation of the same, and the use and enjoyment of the furniture, plate, house linen, pictures, vehicles, horses, and generally all movable effects in and upon the said premises at the time of my death." At the time of the testator's death, he was living in a hired house, at Rondebosch; but he had entered into a contract for the building of a substantial residence on a property which he had acquired at Kenilworth, and it is now contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that under this bequest she is entitled to live in and occupy that house and the ground adjoining it. In my opinion, this must be held to be the true intention of the testator, because, unless the house and grounds at Kenilworth are considered to be so intended, the bequest would fall to the ground altogether. The testator at the time was not living in the house at Kenilworth; he died after the date upon which, under the contract, the house had to be completed; but, in point of fact, the house was not completed before the testator's death. It was only completed after his death, and I am clearly of opinion that it was his intention that his wife should have the right to live in and occupy that house, which was in process of being built, and the grounds adjoining. That house and the grounds immediately adjoining may fairly be held to have been in the occupation of the testator at the time of his death. He was not there personally, but he had made a contract for the building of this house, and, through the contractor and his men, the testator was in legal occupation of the house and grounds. But the plaintiff's counsel goes further, and claims that she is also entitled to live in and occupy the house and grounds, which, at the time of the testator's death, were in the occupation of Dr. Robertson. In my opinion, that would be a stretching of the language used by the testator beyond what would be justified by the words actually used. The testator speaks of "my house," and not "my houses"; it is a single house that he refers to. If the plaintiff's contention be correct, the testator would have used the words "my houses and grounds in my occupation." But, even if he had used the words "my houses and my grounds," then there would be the further difficulty that the house occupied by Dr. Robertson was not in the occupation of the testator. In my opinion, that cannot be included. It is said that it would be a great inconvenience to Mrs. Crobie if somebody else should be occupying this house. Well, I do not perceive the great inconvenience, nor do I see that there is anything very extraordinary in it, that the testator should have reserved a rent-producing property from his Kenilworth estate. It is not quite clear what proportion of the property was actually in the occupation of Dr. Robertson. He seems to have considered that he was only in occupation of the house. If that be so, then it is only that portion that should be excluded, besides, of course, access to the house. The doctor has access to the house, and that access he must continue to have, but it seems quite a reasonable construction that the testator intended that a rent-producing property, although next the property of which he gives occupation to his wife, should be excluded from the property which she was to live in and occupy. He could hardly have wished her to occupy two houses at the same time, and the house occupied by Dr. Robertson does not seem to be so small and insignificant as to be capable of being regarded as a mere appurtenance for labourers and servants of the plaintiff to live in. I consider, therefore, that the declaration upon this point should be: "That the testator is entitled to the occupation of the land belonging to the testator and situate at Kenilworth, with the exception of the portion in the occupation of Dr. Robertson at the date of the testator's death." Then, as to the furniture and effects, there seems to be no real dispute. The further declaration would be: "That the plaintiff is entitled to the use and enjoyment of the furniture and plate mentioned in the 10th paragraph of the declaration." The next point upon which there is a dispute is as to what proportion of the rates and taxes and other costs of keeping up the premises should be borne by the plaintiff, and what proportion should be borne by the executor. In my opinion, for the reasons which I have stated during the argument, the plaintiff should bear those expenses which, as occupier, she is liable to bear. It is true that she has "free occupation" under the will, that "free occupation" is as between her and the executor, that she is not to be called upon by the executor to bear any part of the costs in keeping up this property—she is not to be called upon to do that, but any charges to which she, as occupier, is legally liable, quite independently of her relations to the executor, she is bound to continue to pay, for instance, the tenant's rate, the Municipal tenant's rate. The water rate she must pay, but, on the other hand, the Divisional Council's rates form a charge which the owner must pay, and the Municipal owner's rates also form a charge which the owners must pay. These, I am clearly of opinion that the defendants should be ordered to pay. Then, as to the costs of repair, what is bequeathed to the plaintiff is the right of "free occupation of the house and grounds." Well, she could not have a "free occupation" if the house is allowed to fall into such a state of repair as to make it uninhabitable, and, therefore, in my opinion, the costs of necessary repairs to maintain the house in a habitable condition should also be a charge upon the testator's estate. The Court will, therefore, order that as long as the plaintiff shall continue to live in and occupy the said house and grounds the Divisional Council rates and the Municipal owner's rates and costs of necessary repairs to maintain the house in a habitable condition, should be borne by the testator's estate. There is a claim in reconvention for a declaration as to what the plaintiff should pay, but I do not know whether the defendants press for such a declaration, because it follows from the judgment of the Court that if the defendants are not bound to pay the tenant's rate and the water rate, she must pay them herself. So that I do not think there is any necessity for any further declaration. As to the costs, I think they may fairly come out of the estate.

Mr. Schreiner said that the Court had given no direction with regard to the insurance of the property. The plaintiff wished it to be quite clear that there was no duty upon her to insure the property.

De Villiers, C.J.: If you wish an expression of opinion, I should certainly say that it is clear that there can be no obligation on the plaintiff to insure. His lordship, in reply to counsel, said that the costs would include costs of commission to take Mr. Hutton's evidence.

Maasdorp, J., concurren.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Herold and Cie; Defendant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS.

Ex parte DAVIDSON. { 1904.
 { Nov. 3rd.

Attorney—Scots Law—Agent in Sheriff Court—Admission.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for the admission of Arthur Hallam Davidson as an attorney and notary.

Sir H. Juta opposed the application on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society.

Mr. Buchanan explained that the case was adjourned from last term to call on the respondents to say why he should not be admitted as an attorney of the Court.

The petitioner's affidavit stated that he was a law agent, or solicitor, in Scotland, and was also a solicitor in the Supreme Court of the Transvaal. He submitted certificates of enrolment. Petitioner's name was still on the roll of law agents in Scotland, and attorneys of the Transvaal. Petitioner was desirous of being admitted as a notary public in this country. Therefore he prayed for (a) an order for his admission as an attorney of the Court, and (b) to grant an order for the examination of petitioner as a conveyancer and notary public.

Mr. Buchanan said that, of course, the prayers all depended on the decision of the Court on the petitioner's application. If he was admitted then he could try and pass the examination for conveyancer and notary public, but if the application was refused then he would have to give it up. The applicant's petition states that he is a Scots law agent, and an attorney of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal. He asks to be admitted as an attorney of this Court, and to be examined with a view to admission as a notary and conveyancer.

[Hopley, J.: What right has he to admission?]

Sec 36 and 37 Vict., cap. 63, sec. 1, and compare with sec. 6 of Act 11 of 1903. The affidavits show that the applicant is an agent in the Sheriff Court in Scotland.

[Scots certificates and one certificate from the Transvaal H.C. were put in.]

Sir H. Juta (for the Law Society) read the affidavit of R. J. McCallum (secretary to the Society) pointing out that the applicant had only been admitted in Scotland to practise in the Sheriff Court, that he had lent his name to an unqualified man, and has been carrying on business as an attorney and notary.

Applicant's replying affidavit denied that he had practised as an attorney and notary or had held himself out as such.

[Hopley, J.: How is the case affected by his being an attorney of the Transvaal?]

Mr. Buchanan: See sec. 2 of Act 30 of 1892, though I am not sure that this will apply. He was admitted in the Transvaal on his Scots qualification. It is on that that he relies. Mr. McCallum denies that he has been admitted to practice in the Court of Session; but his certificate shows that he was so admitted, though, possibly, he may not have been enrolled. Sec. 19 of the Charter of Justice refers to Writers to the Signet. Sec. 6 of Act 11 of 1903 admits Scots Law Agents. See Rule of Court 293. The applicant applies as a solicitor who is qualified to practice in the Supreme Court in Scotland. Our law says nothing about enrolment.

[Hopley, J.: But in point of fact he has not been enrolled?]

No. The question came up in ex parte Milligan (11 S.C.R.). That was before the Act 11 of 1903 was passed, but I would ask that he be at all events admitted to practise in the Circuit Court. See Re Milligan (4 C.T.R., 114).

[Hopley, J.: If you confine your application to that, perhaps the Law Society may not object.]

All I can urge is that under Rule 293 enrolment is not necessary.

Sir H. Juta: The Law Society does not consider the applicant's explanation satisfactory as to the terms of the advertisement on his sign-board. Smith, the clerk, says that the exhibition of this signboard was contrary to instructions. But what instructions? Some further explanation is necessary.

Hopley, J., said that the applicant asked to be admitted an attorney of that Court. He seemed to found his application on two grounds, one of which was that he had been admitted an attorney of the High Court of the Transvaal, and the other that he was a legal practitioner of some sort or other from Scotland. As to the Transvaal qualification, it did not seem that that would help him at all in the court, because he had not passed the requisite examinations set down by Act of Parliament to enable him to practise in this colony, and there was no Act of Parliament authorising the judges to accept people because they practised in the Transvaal. With regard to the ground that he had been a law agent in Scotland, he (his lordship) considered that he had not the qualifications sufficient for the position of attorney, but there would be some chance of his being admitted to the Circuit Court to practise as he had been in the Sheriff's Court, if he had conducted himself as he should have done; but there had been allegations made against him that he had been guilty of unprofessional conduct. The applicant denied that. The Court could not see its way to grant the present application, but it would give him power to apply again on January 12 for admission to the Circuit Court, when he would be expected to give a full explanation of the allegations made against him.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied for the admission of Claude Merrington as an attorney and notary.

The application was granted.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

GREENBERG AND CO. V. { 1904.
LEWIS. { Nov. 3rd.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a dishonoured cheque for £6 12s. 6d. and interest, and also for provisional sentence, under Rule 329d. on a sum of £20 19s. 6d., for goods sold and delivered.

The application was granted.

STRUBEN V. PITT.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, less £450 paid on account, together with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st January, 1904, and also that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

The application was granted.

ZIETSMAN V. CLIFFORD.

Mr. Le Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, together with interest at 10 per cent. from 1st January, 1904, and also £10 insurance money, paid by plaintiff on behalf of defendant.

The application was granted.

BEBMAN V. TIMBIE.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on three sums of £75, £45, and £15 respectively, in accordance with certain conditions of sale of land sold to defendant at Kraaifontein.

The application was granted.

HILL AND CO. V. CATTO.

Mr. Sutton applied for the final adjudication of defendant's estate.

The application was granted.

CLEGHORN AND HARRIS V. CORBALLIS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on October 2.

The application was granted.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. BAILEY AND CO.

Mr. Benjamin applied for a final order of sequestration of the defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on October 6.

The application was granted.

SWANEPOOL V. WENTZEL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £600, with interest at 6 per cent. from October, 1903.

The application was granted.

WEINTRAUB AND CO. V. VOESE.

Mr. D. P. Buchanan moved for an order of civil imprisonment against the defendant for non-compliance with an order of the Court directing him to pay to plaintiff £18 12s. 6d. and £14 14s. 1d., taxed costs.

His Lordship inquired if plaintiffs would be satisfied with a stay of execution if the defendant paid a certain amount each month.

Mr. Buchanan said the defendant had promised to pay the debt on or about November 20.

The application was granted, the execution of which was suspended to November 25.

WALLIS V. MICHELSON.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on October 18.

The application was granted.

GOURLAY, CAVANAGH AND CO. V. MEYERS.

Mr. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on three promissory notes for £750, £250, and £300, together with 7 per cent. on the first two, and 6 per cent. on the third, from July, 1904, and judgment, under Rule 329d, for £53 for goods sold and delivered.

The application was granted.

SELLAR BROS. V. HIGGO.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. The provisional order granted on September 26.

The application was granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

CAVANAGH V. SHARPE } 1904.
} Nov. 3rd.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d. for £23 3s. 11d., amount of rent due.

The application was granted.

COHEN AND KAPLEN V. SAED AND CO.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved, under Rule 329d. for judgment for a sum of £34, arrears of rent due.

The application was granted.

COLLINS AND CO. V. MEYERS.

Mr. Close moved, under Rule 329d. for judgment for a sum of £29 1s. 3d. due for goods sold and delivered.

The application was granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. PENTZ.

Mr. Close moved, under Rule 329d. for judgment for £77 12s. 5d., amount due for goods sold and labour done.

The application was granted.

REID AND CO. V. MCGREGOR.

Mr. Gutsche moved, under Rule 329d. for judgment for the sum of £549 15s. 6d., amount due for goods supplied and work done, and £12, value of a horse sold.

The application was granted.

SANDERSON V. RUGG.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d., on a sum of £23 6s. 6d., for work and labour done and goods supplied.

In reply to His Lordship, Mr. Buchanan said the summons was left at the White House Hotel, Somerset Strand for the defendant, where he was supposed to be living.

[Hopley, J.: But the question arises as to whether the defendant knows anything of these proceedings or not.]

Mr. Buchanan: Of course the real point is as to whether the White House Hotel was his residence or not.

Hopley, J., said he would like to know if the summons had been served or not. He would like to have the evidence of the hotel proprietor.

Mr. Buchanan: He appears to have received it without any comment.

[Hopley, J.: Hotel proprietors will accept almost anything for anybody stopping with them.]

The matter was allowed to stand over for proof of the service of the summons.

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. Benjamin applied on behalf of Jacobus Adrian Nelson for his discharge as an insolvent.

The Master's report stated that the estate was surrendered on August 11, 1902, and on the 12th August a final meeting of creditors was held, but no debts were filed, and the matter had been settled.

The application was granted.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan asked permission to be allowed to mention the application of S. Lewis to be rehabilitated. [Hopley, J.: How is it that it is not down on the cause list?]

Mr. Buchanan: I have only just been briefed. I understand that as the applicant was rather slow in bringing in his fees the attorney did not present it.

The applicant's petition was read by Mr. Buchanan, and stated that in 1894, when only 18 years of age he went into partnership with one Margolius at Beaufort West. They surrendered their estate, and deponent as a result received two years' for fraudulent insolvency, which sentence he had served. He was then very young and easily led, but since then his business abilities had greatly increased.

Hopley, J., said it was impossible to rehabilitate a person who had been guilty of fraudulent insolvency. The application would be refused.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MCKILLOP V. MCKILLOP } 1904.
} Nov. 3rd

Mr. Van Zyl moved to have a rule nisi making the respondent a prodigal declared absolute.

The application was granted.

JACKSON AND SPENCE V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Lewis applied to have an award of arbitrators put in, made a rule of Court in terms of a consent paper put in.

The application was granted.

ESTATE LATE VORSTER.

Mr. Benjamin applied for the appointment of a curator ad litem. The application was partly a formal matter, but it had to be done.

The application was granted, Mr. S. Peter Potgieter being appointed.

RAPHAEL V. MAY.

Dr. Groer applied to have a date fixed for the trial of this case, which was an action for damages for wrongful imprisonment.

Hopley, J., directed counsel to ascertain if there was a convenient day open for the trial. It would be well to mention it later on.

Subsequently Dr. Greer moved to fix a day for trial in the above case, in which the plaintiff sued for damages for wrongful imprisonment and malicious arrest.

Case set down for trial on the 24th November.

Ex parte THE EXECUTRIX ESTATE ALBERTYN.

Mr. Upington moved to make absolute a rule nisi, granted a fortnight ago, calling on all persons concerned to show cause why an eighth share in favour of George Curston should not be transferred to the petitioner. Unfortunately, there was a slight error in the publication in "Ons Land."

Hopley, J., ordered an amended publication in "Ons Land," and the matter to be mentioned again on the last day of term.

BOSMAN AND ARDERNE V. WINNITZKY.

Mr. Roux moved to have the provisional order of sequestration discharged.

Granted.

Ex parte ESTATE HARNES.

Mr. Benjamin moved for confirmation of the sale of certain property in favour of the executor.

Granted.

Ex parte TRACHET.

Mr. P. Jones moved to have a certain ante-nuptial contract amended. The name of the petitioner was erroneously entered on the contract as "Adolph Louis."

Granted.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS ESTATE VENTER.

Mr. Burton moved for the appointment of a curator to certain children in the estate of the late Hermanus Venter, for the purpose of defending an action.

Order granted, Mr. Roux appointed as curator ad litem.

Ex parte COURTENAY.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to remove a certain road from the plan of the petitioner's property at Elsie's River Halt.

A rule nisi was granted calling on all parties interested to show cause why the rule should not issue calling on the Registry Surveyor of Deeds to remove the road, one publication in the "Cape Times" and "South African News," and the rule to be affixed to some public place, returnable 12th January.

Ex parte MULVIHAL AND OTHERS.

Mr. Roux moved for the appointment of a liquidator of the National Sporting Club, which was being voluntarily wound up. The petitioners were in favour of John C. Valentine as liquidator.

Granted.

Ex parte LUCKHOFF.

Mr. Sutton moved for the amendment of an order of Court, in which the petitioner obtained an order attaching property under the wrong names of the holders.

Granted.

HAAKENSEN V. HAAKENSEN.

Mr. Russell moved for an extension of the return day of the edictal citation. In November last petitioner was granted leave to sue his wife, who was at Hove, Brighton, for restitution of conjugal rights. Cable information had stated the defendant had left Hove. The prayer was for extension of return day, and for substituted service, but counsel had been able to obtain defendant's real address, and asked for authority to change by cable the date of the return day.

Order granted, return day extended until December 20, the Registrar having leave to cable an amendment of the citation.

WARNER AND CO. V. IMPEY.

Accommodation note.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £200, dated January 23, and payable at the Standard Bank, Stellenbosch, on the 28th April.

The affidavit of the defendant set out that the note was an accommodation one. He had never received value for the same. He had never been applied to for due payment of the same, and he had always been of the belief that payment of the note was made by Messrs. Rapley and Company.

The affidavit of Robert Warner set out that never until early this year did he know that the defendants' note was an accommodation one. Had he been so informed he most certainly would not have taken the promissory note. Further affidavits set out that the note did not appear to be an accommodation one.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton for the defendant.

After hearing counsel in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said this case disclosed a rather complicated set of circumstances, in which there was a considerable amount of conflict of evidence as to the relative rights of the parties as to the fate of various moneys, and as to the agreements between the parties. All that made it very difficult for the Court to decide the case, on a motion for provisional sentence. There was besides the complication of facts a good deal to be said on the legal aspect of the case as to whether Dr. Impey could or could not claim any rights to the payments made by the people he accommodated. He admitted he was liable for £116 2s. 4d., and had made a tender of that amount. It seemed to his lordship that the proper judgment was to give provisional sentence for that amount, with costs to date of tender. Plaintiff to go into the principal case for the balance, in which case the costs incurred subsequent to the date of tender, including the costs of the present application, were to abide the result. Should the plaintiff fail to proceed with the principal case he should pay all costs after tender.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MULVEY V. CAPE GOVERN- { 1904.
MENT RAILWAYS. { Nov. 4th.

Personal injury — Negligence —
Orders of superior officers.

This was an action brought by Ernest Albert Mulvey, signal fitter, of Clarens-road, Wynberg, against the Cape Government Railways, for £2,000 damages, for personal injuries, alleged to have been received owing to the negligence of the defendants' servants.

The declaration set out that the defendants constructed, owned, and worked a line of railway, leading from Cape Town to Simon's Town, and passing through Wynberg. On or about the 28th March, 1904, at or near Wynberg Station, plaintiff, in the ordinary course of his employment, was engaged in drilling a crank at a stop-block at a portion of the above-mentioned line of railway, when certain agents or servants of the defendants, in the course of necessary operations, at the said station, did so carelessly shunt and move a railway truck along the line that the said truck struck the plaintiff, causing him severe injuries. In consequence of the aforesaid negligence and careless control, plaintiff had been paralysed as to the muscles of his hip and leg, and had sustained other personal injuries of a permanent nature, which rendered it impossible for him to pursue his trade and calling in the future. He had incurred hospital, medical, and other expenses, and had been unable to follow his employment. By reason thereof, he had suffered damages in the sum of £2,000, to which the defendant was liable. He prayed for judgment for £2,000, and costs of suit.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal allegations, and that the injuries were sustained by the plaintiff while he was drilling a crank at a stop-block. The defendants specially denied that the truck was carelessly and negligently shunted. The plaintiff, at the time he sustained the injuries, was unnecessarily, improperly, negligently, and unlawfully at the place at which he received the said injuries, and the said injuries were due to and caused by his own negligence and carelessness. The defendants prayed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; Mr. Howel Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) was for the Government.

Ernest Albert Mulvey (the plaintiff), who had to be accommodated with a chair owing to his injuries, said that he had been in the employ of the C.G.R. as a signal fitter at a wage of three guineas a week. On the 27th March he took his orders from a foreman named Griffiths. He had been connecting rods for the new signal-box; in order to do this work two cranks had to be drilled. He received orders from Griffiths on the 26th or 28th to drill the cranks. When witness received the orders on the 26th he remarked that he supposed he would have to go to the stop-block; this was the only suitable and convenient place. Griffiths said, "Aye, that will do." Witness went to the stop-block, and finished the crank. The proper thing to have had would have been a drilling post, but they had no such convenience at Wynberg Station at that time, and the stop-block was the most suitable place. On the following Monday, March 28, he went to the stop-block on instructions from Griffiths that he was to drill the second crank. The stop-block he went to was, in his opinion, the safest one, inasmuch as he had seen trucks standing there two or three days. Witness was accompanied by a labourer named Davis, who would have to drill the crank when it had been hammered and fixed by witness. Witness was now unable to find Davis, who, he believed, had left the service of the C.G.R. There were two trucks standing in this particular siding when witness went to the stop-block; he was working at the crank, and had his back turned to the trucks, which were about four or five yards away from the place where he was standing. While he was hammering, he was struck by a truck, and he jumped out of the line and dropped to the ground. He was afterwards removed to the Wynberg Cottage Hospital, where he remained a fortnight. He was then taken to his home. Before he was knocked down, he received no warning of any kind of the truck being in motion. Witness had suffered very much bodily; he seemed to have no power over his right leg, and he could not continue his usual work. He had had nothing from the Government since the 15th June, and had had to live upon charity. He had received 16 guineas from the Railway Sick Fund during a period of three months, and the Government had paid him two-thirds of his wages for 69 days, and had then stopped payment on the 15th June. Witness was married and was without employment. He was told by his medical attendant that he would be incapacitated during the rest of his life from doing hard work. Witness had paid for extra nourishment and medicine, and his claim was based principally on what would secure for him a reasonable remuneration for the future.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had not asked the Government for employment since the accident. It was not his place to write to the Government. He had not tried to obtain employment elsewhere. He did not think he was yet fit for employment, even of a light character. Witness did not know that there was a carpenter's bench in the steam shed. He would have been dismissed from the service if he had gone to look for a carpenter's bench. He could have done the job on a carpenter's bench. He did not ask Griffiths for a drilling post; he did not know whether he could have got a drilling post from Salt River Works. They had only two drilling posts at Salt River, among thirty fitters. Witness had been in the service seventeen months when the accident happened. He knew it was dangerous to work at the stop-block. He was unable to work at the back of the stop-block, because it was full of rubbish. He could not remove the rubbish, because it was not his duty. If his foreman had seen him clearing away the rubbish, he would have been dismissed from the service. This would have happened, in all probability; in any case, he would have been reprimanded.

Witness had no authority to order the labourer Davis to remove the rubbish. The rubbish consisted of timber, cement, and so on. The wagon struck him at the back of his right hip.

Witness thought he should have been warned about the shunting operations. The shunter's duty, he considered, was to see that the road was clear before he commenced operations. He did not hear the engine-driver sound his whistle; at the same time, he would not say that the driver did not do so.

Arthur John Lilley, signalman at Wynberg Station, described the operations, as a result of which the plaintiff was struck and knocked down. It appeared that a train was being moved from the down suburban line into the goods siding. He did not hear the engine-driver sound his whistle. Witness also produced a copy of the rules and regulations of the Railway Department, and said that rule 526 contained a direction that engine-drivers should whistle when moving trucks from sidings.

Cross-examined: The rules were dated July, 1904.

Arthur Wakelin, a signal fitter, formerly in the employ of the C.G.R., said that on the 28th March he was employed at Salt River, and was ordered in the evening to proceed to Wynberg under the directions of Griffiths. On the 29th March, about 10 a.m., he was sent to finish the crank that Mulvey had commenced. He completed the job on the stop block. It was customary to work at stop blocks when there was no drilling post available. Witness agreed with the plaintiff that if there was no drilling post at the station, the stop block was the most suitable thing to use. The rubbish behind the stop block was removed after witness had been there a little while, so that he could go behind the block to do his work.

By the Court: When he had heard how the accident happened, he got a coloured man to remove the rubbish from behind the stop block.

Further evidence having been led, Mr. Alexander closed his case.

Henry Crocker, station master, Wynberg, said that the plaintiff had no right to be where he was when the accident happened, without the authority of witness, and that he gave no one any authority to be there.

Cross-examined: It was a rule that his authority had to be got for anything connected with safe working at the station. If any one had been working at the stop block, witness should have been acquainted with it. He did not think that rule 526 was in the old book of regulations. He thought a driver would be negligent if he did not whistle when he was commencing shunting operations. Griffiths had been recognised by the workmen as a foreman. If the road was being interfered with, witness should have been notified; in the ordinary way he would have expected Griffiths to notify him. He should expect a shunter to look down the side of the trucks to see if all was clear; he would not regard it as a shunter's duty to go round to the end of the trucks to see if anybody was working at the centre of the stop block.

Perry Anderson, signal inspector of the Railway Department, said that after the accident the plaintiff was placed on full pay until some time in July. Witness had charge of the erection of the new signal box at Wynberg Station. In witness's absence, Griffiths would be in charge of the work. He did not regard the stop block as a proper place where the work could be done; it was just a matter of convenience. The work could have been done at a carpenter's bench that was close to the steam shed. Mulvey could have obtained a drilling post by asking the blacksmith to bend a piece of iron. Such a drill post could have been prepared in ten minutes or a quarter of an hour. Witness gave an oral demonstration of the operation the plaintiff was performing when the accident occurred. Continuing, he said that Mulvey could have directed the labourer who was working with him to remove the rubbish from behind the stop block. The Government could provide the plaintiff with light work at between 7s. 6d. and 8s. per diem.

Cross-examined: The Government had not offered work to the plaintiff, nor had the plaintiff made an application.

Thomas Griffiths, signal fitter, C.G.R., denied that he instructed Mulvey to drill the crank at the stop block. The crank was needed to connect up the points to the new signal block. He told Mulvey to drill the crank, but not where he should do it, as far as he remembered. There were only two cranks drilled during the whole of the work. The stop block would be the most convenient place for the plaintiff to use for the drilling.

Cross-examined: If the plaintiff had said he was going to the stop block, witness would not have stopped him. He had seen the stop block used for this purpose at Wynberg, but not elsewhere. If there was no drilling post or bench, the stop block would have been most convenient. If witness had had the drilling to do, in all probability he would have gone to the same place.

Re-examined: Witness exercised no authority over the fitters.

By the Court: The plaintiff could have done the work at the side of the stop block, instead of being in the centre; or, if he had removed the rubbish, he could have worked at the back of the block, where it would have been quite safe.

John Thomas Sasman, shunter, Wynberg Station, also gave evidence as to the operations which were responsible for the accident to the plaintiff. He said that he had not seen plaintiff before the operations. A short train was brought up to his two trucks that were standing in the siding. Witness was on the cow-catcher of the engine, and was proceeding to couple up to the larger truck, when the concussion drove back to the dead-end the small truck, which caught the plaintiff. The trucks were not coupled together when standing in the siding. The brakes were not on the trucks.

Cross-examined: If the brake had been on the trucks they would not have moved more than a foot or two. The driver should whistle as a rule before he moved trucks. Witness's duty was to see that the road was clear before the shunting was begun. He went and looked at the siding half an hour before the train came in from Cape Town. He did not see anybody working at the stop block at that time. When the train came in and was moving to the goods siding, witness rode on the footplate and the cow-catcher.

Frederick Dunn, engine driver, C.G.R., said he drove the engine that caused the mischief, but he did not see the plaintiff before the accident, and, as far as he could see, the siding was clear. The nearer truck had been coupled to the engine, and they were proceeding to couple up to the second truck when this second truck ran back from the impact and caught the plaintiff.

Cross-examined: Witness did not sound his whistle when he turned into the siding for shunting purposes.

Dr. Kruger, railway medical officer, of Wynberg, gave evidence as to the condition of the plaintiff. He said he thought an operation would tend to ease the plaintiff's injury; this would involve plaintiff in no expense. Witness considered that he was perfectly fit to do light work.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., said that it might have made a difference in the legal position of the plaintiff if he had received direct orders from his superior officer as to the place where the work was to be done, but, by disposing at once of the issue of fact upon that point, it would obviate the necessity of going into what might have been his legal position. He thought it had been satisfactorily proved that all that had been done by Griffiths on this occasion was to instruct the plaintiff to drill a couple of holes in the crank, and that he gave the plaintiff no special orders to proceed to the stop-block, and perform the work there. That being so, the conduct of the plaintiff, in proceeding to this stop block, was not brought about by any orders from Griffiths. The question now arose whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in going to this stop-block, and, further, whether, after he arrived at this spot, he might have avoided danger by taking proper precautions? He himself admitted in the declaration that, at the time he was doing the work, he was upon the line of the railway. Now, there was no necessity for going upon the line of railway to do this work. It was convenient to the plaintiff to go there, but it was a place of danger, and he might have refused to go there unless proper precautions were taken for his safety. He (the learned Judge) thought it was satisfactorily proved that the work might have been done in some other way, and at another place, if the plaintiff had pointed out the difficulties which existed in not having proper means at his disposal just then. It was quite clear that, in standing upon the line in this siding, at a place which was used daily by trucks, he was guilty of putting himself in a place of danger. That in itself, unless he used proper precautions to prevent the danger he was exposing himself to, would amount to gross negligence. It would appear that, when he took up his position upon the line for the purpose of performing his work, he turned his back to the quarter from which the danger might come, and, consequently, was not on the look-out. Not only that, but when he proceeded to do the work on the stop-block he chose the most dangerous position to do it when, with a little trouble, he might have performed it in another way, and, here again, there was an element of carelessness. Without any warning from anybody else, the plaintiff ought to have known that he was in a position of danger, and, rather than risk the injuries which he afterwards suffered, he should have taken a little trouble, which would have consisted in asking his assistant to remove the lumber from behind the stop-block, and so have enabled him to work from behind the stop-block. Under these circumstances, he (the learned Judge) must come to the conclusion that the plaintiff, in going to that spot to perform the work, was guilty of negligence, and that he was guilty of negligence in the manner in which he performed the work when he arrived there. Touching on the conduct of the defendants' servants, his lordship said that he thought both the driver and shunter used ordinary care, and that he did not think they were called upon to use unusual care or precautions. He did not find that it was an absolute necessity that the whistle should have been blown by the driver. The conclusion he had come to was that the accident was the result of gross negligence on the part of the plaintiff himself, and was not owing to any negligence on the part of the defendants' servants. There must, therefore, be judgment for the defendants, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: C. Brady; Defendants' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte LAWRENCE AND { 1904.
OTHERS. { Nov. 4th.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Williams Durban Mossman, trading as Bailey and Co. Counsel pointed out that as it was a going concern, it would be a great advantage to the creditors to have the shop opened, and the names of A. N. Foote and H. Lewis were suggested as fit and proper persons to act as provisional trustees, with power to carry on the business.

Order granted.

TRIAL CAUSES.

DAMONS V. DAMONS.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Mr. Rainsford was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Martha Damons stated that about June, 1897, her husband sent her to Knysna, to her parents, and when she wrote for money the defendant refused to give her any. About a year ago she saw him, for the first time since the separation.

By Hopley, J.: She never made him angry. When she asked him to take her back, he said: "You can get married again."

By Mr. Rainsford: Two months ago the defendant passed her on the street, and took no notice of her.

The defendant was ordered to restore conjugal rights to the plaintiff by the 25th December, failing which to show cause, on the 20th January, 1906, why the plaintiff should not have a decree of divorce.

GEP V. GEP AND ANOTHER.

This was an action of divorce, by reason of the defendant's adultery with the co-respondent, one Kieswetter.

The certificate of the marriage not having been forthcoming. His Lordship decided to hear the evidence.

Mr. Burton for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

Roland Wilkinson, clerk in the office of Mr. Andrews, who was acting as attorney for the defendants in the matter until he received notice of bar, stated that Mr. Andrews was still the attorney when he received notice of the case having been set down.

Arthur Gep, plaintiff, stated that he was married to the first defendant on the 7th September, 1902, at St. Luke's Church, Upton Park, London. His wife had the certificate of marriage. Immediately after his marriage he came out to South Africa, to take up business at Somerset West. The second defendant was his brother's brother-in-law. In March, 1903, he came home one evening to find a letter from his wife, in which she said he need not trouble to come to town to fetch her. In the course of the letter she said she would never be happy in her life again, and that the best thing was to end her life, and that he would find her dead body in the river, finishing the epistle with "Good-bye for ever." Witness scarched the river, but subsequently found her living with the second defendant, at Salt River. After negotiations, he induced his wife to return, and at her request he took a house for her at Salt River. Finally, at the end of June, she told him that she did not care about him, and left to take up abode with Kiewetter.

Anna Maria Scholtz gave evidence as to the relationship between the defendants. The first defendant had a baby in June last.

Hopley, J., said there would be no order at present, but the matter might be mentioned again on the production of the marriage certificate.

KONJA V. KONJA.

Mr. M Bisset was for the plaintiff and the defendant was in default. Counsel explained that the papers were not exactly in order, and ultimately his lordship decided to take the evidence de bene esse.

August Konja, plaintiff, stated that he married the defendant at Worcester on February 12, 1900. They lived together happily enough for a couple of years, when she ran away with a Kafir to the Maitland Location. Witness pursued her to Maitland, where he found her living as the other Kafir's wife. When witness accosted her on a second occasion she was living with another Kafir named Jameson, who said that while he was sorry for witness there could be no doubt that his wife loved him (Jameson) better than witness.

Further evidence having been called,

His Lordship decided that after proper notice was served on the defendant the matter could be mentioned again.

STRACEY V. ADAMS.

1904.
Nov. 4th.
" 8th.

Personal injury — Negligence —
Responsibility of building contractor.

This was an action to recover £150 damages from the plaintiff by reason of his negligence in not providing a proper footway in Longmarket-street in May last. The defendant, in walking along the boarding, tripped, and fell into the road, and injured her arm, causing her to stop her business as a boarding-house keeper.

The plea denied that she suffered any special injuries, and that the footway was constructed with the approval of the Municipality.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. P. Jones) was for the plaintiff; and Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), was for the defendant.

Marie Stracey, plaintiff, stated that on the 15th May she was returning from Sea Point, and a little after nine o'clock she was walking along Longmarket-street. Turning round by Hynes, Matthews' corner, her husband walked in front on account of the narrowness of the pavement. It was dark, and the rain had commenced. Her husband called out, "Mind, Marie!" and he had no sooner said so when her toe caught in the wood, and she fell into the road. Her left arm and right thumb were hurt, and next day she saw Dr. Morris, who had her arm put in a sling. Witness herself ran a boarding-house, but up to the present she was unable to go on with her work. Some of the boarders had left, and ultimately she gave up the boarding-house. Mr. Adams came to see her, and advised her to rest her arm and to get a cook in, and he would be responsible for everything. She had spent above £2 at the chemist's for medicines and lotions. She estimated her damages to clothes at about £8. Before the accident she was making a clear profit of from £8 to £10 per month, but after the accident she lost on the house. Finally, she gave up the house.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: It was a wet night, but she denied that she slipped or fell in stepping off the pavement. The defendant admitted he was at fault several times.

John A. Stracey, husband to the plaintiff, stated that the pavement at the scene of the accident was composed of three planks. After the accident, his wife was unable to get up, and he laid a complaint at the Town House on the Wednesday. The three planks had been taken away, and the pavement had been levelled with gravel. The defendant offered witness £20 to settle the case. On Monday he did not draw anyone's attention to the boards. On Tuesday the boards were exactly in the same position. He could not give any idea how he passed the planks.

Re-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He could not say whether the light round the corner was burning or not. He did not know the seriousness of the accident on Monday.

Dr. Morris, who attended the plaintiff on the 16th May, stated she was suffering from a sprain of the right thumb and injuries of the left arm. Some of the fibres of the muscles of the arm were ruptured. Later on, he recommended a massage treatment. He paid her something from 20 to 30 visits at 5s. a time.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: It was not a large order to have a seven weeks' massage treatment.

Nellie Stracey, daughter of the plaintiff, stated that she was walking by her mother's side on the night in question. She was present when Mr. Adams said he was sorry about the accident, and that he had taken the boards away.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: There would not be much room for two persons to walk on that sidepath. Witness might have been a little behind. When her mother fell, the first thing she looked to was what she fell over. She was positive there was no light above the first post.

Ernest Shepherd, photographer, boarder at the plaintiff's house, said that he left the place five or six weeks after the accident, on account of the indifferent attendance.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: To have such a palpable thing as that footpath was not an uncommon thing in Cape Town.

Thomas Eade, a boarder in the house, corroborated the last witness as to the great change in the attendance at the house after the accident. Several boarders left on that account. The planks were lying close together, but loose on the pavement.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The ends of the boards were very irregular, and they looked dangerous.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Alfred Mathew, partner in the firm of Heynes, Mathew and Co., said he knew the position very well, and he passed it many times a day. Before the building began by Adams, the pavement had always been a slope. When the contractor made excavations, deals were placed on the footpath up to the edge of Fletcher's. Previous to the 15th May, the boards had been put down for a considerable time. He was quite clear that the boards did not project. When he walked over it on the following Monday, he did not notice any change. He could almost swear the light was there on Saturday night.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He did not think he would have walked over the boards in a mechanical fashion.

Nicholas Selfe stated that he lit the lamp on the Sunday night in question.

Patrick Power, police-constable, stated that on the night in question he was on duty in Longmarket-street, and passing the hoarding at about 10.15 p.m. he saw the lamp lit. Had it not been lit, he would have reported it. He never noticed anything against which he could trip.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Had there been any obstruction, he would have noticed it.

P.C. Michael Fitzpatrick stated that he was on duty on the 16th May from 1 a.m. to 6 a.m., and the light was burning on the morning in question. He noticed no obstruction that morning.

P. W. Hamilton, partner in the firm of Shipley and Co., Longmarket-street, stated that in winter time the pavement was almost soapy. The pavement was still composed of the same stuff. There had been another accident since the one in question. The boards were a decided improvement. The boards were level, as they were embedded in the ground. He did not think it possible for the plaintiff to have fallen from the spot described into the road.

Cross-examined: That pavement had been a veritable death trap until the boards were put down.

James Ingram, cutter, in the employ of John Scott, stated he had frequently used the footway in question. The planks to the best of his belief were embedded in the shingle. Had the planks been over the pavement he would have expected to have noticed them.

Thos. Barratt, night watchman at Seale's jewellery establishment, said that several times he was on the footpath. The light was always lit.

Hugo Emmett stated he had occasion to walk over the spot several times daily, and believed there was no projection of boards whatever.

Cross-examined: He could not say why the boards were taken away after the accident.

Edward Pugh, building inspector of the Cape Town Council, stated that he inspected Fletcher's Retail building in the course of construction. It was a Municipal regulation that a light should be burning to warn people that new work was in the course of construction. The woodwork did not project.

M. J. Adams, defendant, stated that the planks did not project above the pavement. He removed the boards after he received a letter from plaintiff, but he had no more use for the boards then. He never admitted any liability, and he was suspicious about plaintiff's arm being very bad. In offering £20, he did not admit any liability; it was merely to save the trouble of Court proceedings.

Cross-examined: He removed the boards because he had no licence from the Municipality to put them down. As near as possible, they were flush with the pavement.

David Brown, foreman for the defendant, who put the boards down, said they were as nearly as possible level.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Before counsel commenced argument, Hopley, J., said he had inspected the place himself, and he was satisfied that the arc light at Heynes, Mathew's would throw no light on the spot whatever, that the little light put up by Municipal regulations threw no light on that side at all, and that there was probably four or five inches of irregularity in the slope of the footpath. Counsel could therefore condense their arguments.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: The action was one for damages caused by the negligence of the defendant in improperly placing certain boards upon the ordinary footway in Longmarket-street, where he was carrying on building operations. The law of course was perfectly clear as to the placing of the boards there in the first instance. The person who placed them in that position being responsible for whatever damage might result. It would appear that after the defendant had made certain excavations at the site known as Fletcher's Retail, a portion of the pavement fell in, and it became necessary for him to reinstate the footway so as to make it safe for passengers. This he did by partially filling in the excavation with gravel, and by placing three loose boards over such gravel, the ends of which were partially upon a slight slope in the cemented portion of the adjoining pavement. This must have caused a ridge almost at the end of the slope, which left in that condition would have caused a danger to anyone passing. He thought it extremely unlikely that the boards were all flush, because the slope itself was not an even one, and when there was heavy rain it might wash the gravel, which was placed at the end of these boards so as to make the way flush with the pavement, away. People having occasion to walk along there many times a day would get used to the sidepath. It had rained heavily during that week, and what he thought happened on the Saturday and Sunday was that this gravel had been washed away by the rain, and he thought all the evidence of those who passed for weeks before and saw nothing was not as valuable as that of the person who passed at that particular time. From his inspection he concluded that the street was a well-lighted one, but it was very different under the gantry on which a dark shadow would be thrown over Heynes, Mathew's balcony, and the light put up according to the Municipal regulations, he was certain, did not illumine the particular spot. He did not pay much attention to the daughter's statement as to whether she was exactly abreast of or somewhat behind her mother—it was likely that she was just lagging behind. He was inclined to believe Mrs. Stracey when she said her foot caught in something, and it was possible she might have been mistaken as to which side of the pole she fell. After comparing the conduct of the plaintiff and the defendant after the accident, his Lordship said it was clear that the plaintiff was liable for the negligence, and he thought 100 guineas would be a fair sum to allow. Judgment would be entered for the plaintiff for £105, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: G. J. O'Reilly; Defendant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SINDLER V. DE VILLIERS. { 1904.
Nov. 7th

Lien—retention—Title deeds.

The applicant agreed with A. to pass a bond in security of his obligations under a lease executed by A. in favour of the applicant and gave a power to the respondent to pass the bond. The power being found to be defective, the respondent requested the applicant to give another power, but the applicant refused and demanded from the respondent the title deeds which he had given to the respondent for the purpose of passing the bond.

Held, that the respondent was not entitled to retain the title deeds.

This was application on notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to hand over the transfer deeds of certain property at De Aar.

The affidavit of the applicant, Jacob Sindler, set out that on the 15th August last he handed over to Abraham de Villiers, at Richmond, the transfer deeds of certain property at De Aar for the purpose of passing a bond for £300. Thereafter he decided not to pass the bond, and De Villiers refused to hand over the transfer.

The replying affidavit of Abraham de Villiers set out that he acted as attorney for Adamstein Bros. and Jacob Sindler in the drawing up of a certain contract. The applicant proposed to pass a bond on his property at De Aar for the sum of £300. When a second power of attorney was drawn up the applicant refused to sign it, offering to pledge his deeds of transfer instead. The respondent was prepared to deliver up the deeds of transfer as soon as the bond was passed.

Mr. Upington was for the applicant, and Mr. M. de Villiers was for the respondent.

Mr. Upington, in argument, said it was difficult to understand on what ground the respondent claimed to retain the title deeds. He said he retained these title deeds because there was a stipulation in the document of lease drawn up at the request of both parties that a covering bond of £300 was to be found by the applicant, but counsel submitted that Mr. De Villiers, who was merely an agent, had no title in law to retain the title deeds.

Mr. De Villiers argued that the respondent had acted all along as agent for the parties, and as he had received instructions from his principals, Messrs. Adamstein Bros., not to hand over the lease, it would only be at his own personal risk if he gave them up.

In reply to the Chief Justice, Mr. De Villiers stated an action was being brought by Adamstein Bros., against the applicants for the fulfilment of the contract.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that the respondent has shown no right to the retention of these documents. He is not the owner of them, and he has not a lien upon them. It is true that there is an understanding on the part of the applicant to pass a bond, but that undertaking does not entitle either the respondent or Adamstein to retain the documents. There is a mere personal contract between the parties, and if that contract is broken there is a claim for damages, but there is no title to the retention of these documents, which belong to the applicant. If a valid power of attorney had been executed by the applicant, and handed over to De Villiers, then it might fairly have been contemplated that there is an existing power coupled with an interest, which becomes irrevocable, and the respondent would be entitled to act upon that power, and make use of the documents in his possession for the purpose of giving effect to that power. It is admitted by the respondent that that power is not valid, not properly signed, and, therefore, cannot operate on these documents. But it is said that the respondent is really acting for Adamstein. That appears to me not to affect the case, because it is the respondent who is in possession of these documents, and it is from him the applicant is entitled to recover. Supposing Adamstein had been one of the parties I don't consider he would have had any right to the retention of these documents, having no lien or ownership. The fact that the respondent was agent for Adamstein does not affect the case. It appears to me the applicant is entitled to these documents, and that the application should be granted with costs. The application will be granted, with costs, reserving the right to insert a claim for repayment of such costs to Adamstein, in case he should pay these costs, in an action to be brought against the present applicant.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Respondent's Attorney: Paul de Villiers.]

FAUDEL AND JAGGER AND CO. V. TRICKEY.

This was an application for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Mr. P. Jones appeared for the applicants, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

His Lordship, in giving judgment, said the terms of the addendum clearly expressed a condition, and if the condition was not fulfilled, the assignment came to an end after the 30th September. There was no doubt that the defendant was unable to pay his debts, and the only course open to the Court was to sequestrate the estate.

APPEL AND LIPSCHITZ V. } 1904.
APPEL. } Nov. 7th.

Insolvent—Right of trustee—
Bequest for maintenance of children.

A testator by his will bequeathed a third of a farm to his son C., and directed that

C. should only enjoy the usufruct for the maintenance of C.'s children. After the testator's death, C. became insolvent, and the trustee sold to the applicant all the insolvent's right and title to the farm. The applicant, by motion, applied for ejectment of the insolvent, not even offering to maintain the children.

Held, that the applicant was not entitled to succeed.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. Benjamin, for the applicant, moved for an order to eject defendant for a portion of a farm in the district of Oudtshoorn.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan, for the respondent, opposed the application on the ground that ejectment was not granted on a motion unless the rights of the parties were undisputed, and because the proper parties had not been summoned.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has no doubt granted orders of ejectment on motion, but that has only been done in cases where the applicant has made out a clear right to the possession of the property. In the present case, the plaintiffs claim as the purchasers from the trustee of the insolvent of all the insolvent's right and title to the farm. It does not appear that any title has been given to the applicants, and it does not appear what position the trustees themselves take up in the matter. The will has been produced, according to which one-third of the share of the property is bequeathed to the insolvent, but upon conditions. It is a conditional bequest. "The share bequeathed to our son Conrad shall after his death go over to his children, and he shall only enjoy the usufruct thereof for their maintenance, and in case he shall refuse or not be able to pay the daughters £600, then our executor shall have the right to sell the lease of one-half of the ground by public auction until the sum is paid." Then, as to the other half, the insolvent shall remain in occupation, but for the benefit of his children. I think, considering that his children would have a claim at his death, and that they could legally claim that he shall devote whatever proceeds he gets out of the property for their benefit, they would have a similar claim against the trustees. It seems that the applicants claim this right independently of the obligation to maintain the children. If they obtain the right, they must share in the obligation. It is not such a clear case as to justify the Court in granting an order on motion. The applicants, if so advised, can bring their action, but the present application will be refused, with costs.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low; Respondents' Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset.]

In Re HANSEN.

1904.
Nov. 7th.
" 14th.

Insolvent — Pension — Trustee — Vesting.

The right to a monthly pension granted by a Harbour Board to an insolvent before his insolvency vests in the trustee of his estate for the benefit of his creditors.

This was an application on behalf of the trustee in the insolvent estate of C. M. Hansen for an order directing the second respondents (the Harbour Board) to pay over to the trustee a certain pension of which Hansen is in receipt from the Harbour Board, and was in receipt when his estate was sequestered.

Mr. Gardiner (for the applicant) argued that by the 48th section of the Insolvent Ordinance all the present and future estate of an insolvent which belonged to him at the time of his insolvency, or to which any right of reversion had then vested in him, vested ipso facto in the trustee of the insolvent estate. The Court had no discretion in the matter, and the applicant was clearly entitled to the order sought.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for the first respondent) argued that a pension was given as a matter of grace for the personal support of the pensioner, and was therefore not assignable. In support of this contention he cited the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and Jones v. Matthews (14 S.C.R., 68).

Curr. Adr. Full.

Posta (Nov. 14).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application by the trustee of C. M. Hansen's insolvent estate to have it declared that the right to a certain pension, payable to the insolvent by the Harbour Board, is legally vested in the trustee, and that as such trustee he is entitled to receive from the Harbour Board all instalments of the pension, as they fall due. There is not much information before the Court as to the terms in which the pension was granted. The amount of the pension is £20 6s. per month, and the accounting officer of the Board, on being asked by the trustee for the payment of the monthly instalments, expressed his willingness to pay the same on receipt of an order of Court, directing him to do so. No question is, therefore, raised as to whether the right to the pension was legally vested in the insolvent at the date of the sequestration, or as to the power of the Court to enforce payment of the pension, and the real question to be decided is whether the right to the pension forms part of the estate, which is vested in the trustee of the insolvent estate, under the 48th section of the Insolvent Ordinance. The estate so vested includes, "all the present and future estate, movable and immovable, personal or real, which shall have belonged or been due to the insolvent at the time when the order for placing his estate under sequestration was made, or as to which any right of reversion shall then be vested in him, or which may thereafter be purchased or acquired by or may revert, descend, or be devised, or come to the insolvent during the continuance of the sequestration, and before the making of the order of Court allowing and confirming the account and plan of distribution, wheresoever the same may be found or known." All money, therefore, to which the insolvent may become entitled during the continuance of the sequestration vests in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The right to receive payments of a pension forms part of the property, and, therefore, part of the estate of the insolvent. In the English case of In re Huggins (L.R., 21 Ch., Div., 85), it was contended on behalf of the bankrupt, a retired Colonial judge, that a pension awarded to him as such is not assignable, that neither the Colonial Office nor the Government of the Colony could be compelled to pay it, and that it did not vest in the trustee. The Court of Appeal, however, held that the pension, although voted annually by the Legislature of the Colony, was "property" which vested in the trustee. The English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, however, contained a very useful and equitable provision which gave a discretion to the Court to fix how much of the bankrupt's income shall be made available for his creditors. Under that provision, the Court of Appeal sanctioned the payment to the trustee of a part of the pension as it fell due, leaving the remaining part for the support of the bankrupt. Unfortunately, our Insolvent Ordinance does not confer a similar discretion on this Court, and I would take this opportunity of suggesting that the Legislature should confer on the Court the power, in cases like the present, and that of Hiddingh's Trustee v. Orphan Chamber (2 Juta, 273), to reserve for the insolvent a portion of any income which was clearly intended to be bestowed on him for his personal support only. In the case just mentioned, the insolvent was a fiduciary heir under a will which directed that, in case of his insolvency, the inheritance was to devolve on the defendants, who were enjoined to apply the interest to the support and maintenance of such insolvent, but the Court, following the decision in Zeederberg's case (2 Juta, 431), held that the annual income vested in the trustees of the insolvent estate. That the Dutch law was equally relentless in the case of a cessio bonorum in appropriating all the insolvent's property for the payment of his debts would appear from Voet (42, 3, 7), although in a later passage (42, 3, 8), he remarks that where from compassion a monthly or yearly allowance has been left to the debtor for the purpose of aliment, he cannot be disturbed in its enjoyment by the creditors. The context, however, would show that this referred to an allowance left after the cessio bonorum had been effected. Grotius (Introd. 3, 51, 6), to whom Voet refers as his authority in regard to the Dutch law, says: "If a debtor, after cessio bonorum has been granted, acquires any property, he is bound to make payment, in so far as such property exceeds his necessary sustenance." But whatever powers the Dutch Courts may have been authorised to exercise in the case of cessio bonorum, this Court has no power to deprive creditors of rights conferred upon them by the Insolvent Ordinance. The Case of Jones v. Matthews (14 S.C.R., 68), which has been strongly relied upon on behalf of the respondent in the present case, was decided in favour of the insolvent under the express provisions of the Ordinance. He was held to be entitled to a reversion, the right to which only vested in him after the confirmation of the account. The legacy there in question was intended to be conditional upon his surviving his mother, and as she died after the confirmation of the account, no right of reversion was vested in the insolvent at the date of the order of sequestration. In the present case there is no question as to any right of reversion. The right to receive future payments of his pension was vested in the respondent at the date of the sequestration of his estate. The right was, of course, limited to his lifetime, in the same way as an annuity may be limited to the lifetime of an annuitant, but it was a vested right, subject to no conditions. In the absence of any provision in our law divesting such a right of the ordinary legal incidents of property, including the liability for the payment of debts, the Court has no power to withhold the right to the pension from the creditors, however much it might desire to reserve a portion for the insolvent himself. The order must therefore be granted as prayed, but the costs will be borne by the estate.

[Attorneys for the trustees: Syfret, Godlonton and Low; Attorney for insolvent: V. A. van der Bijl.]

TOOCH V. LE ROUX.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the applicant, and Mr. Close was for the respondent. The application was on notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause why the applicant, Wm. George Bennett, should not have leave to intervene as co-plaintiff in the above action, in order that he might adduce certain evidence to prove the contention of the parties in a certain lease. Beckett and Le Roux had a lease in the first instance, and then the applicant assigned his rights to Tooch, who, he contended, could take action against him if he did not succeed against Le Roux.

De Villiers, C.J., said he could only deal with the petition on the affidavits before the Court. According to the petition the sole object of the petitioner applying for leave to intervene with the plaintiff was in order to bring evidence in explanation of the document, the construction of which has already been given by the Court. There would be great difficulty in producing such evidence. The object really was to bring an action to rectify the document. That was not stated in the petition upon the present affidavit, and he thought the application should be refused, with costs.

AUSTIN V. MORRELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to have a day fixed for trial by jury. Mr. Upington, who appeared for the first two defendants, said he opposed the application, as an exception had been taken to the declaration, inasmuch as the contractes were illegal and contrary to public morals and policy.

De Villiers, C.J., said the case would be set down for the last Wednesday in next term, and the exceptions could be argued in the meantime, the costs to stand over.

PATERSON, BOYES AND CO. V. HAMILTON.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicants, and Mr. Upington was for the respondent. The application was to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the respondent from interfering with the free access of the petitioners to certain rooms that had been sublet by them to him.

Mr. Upington, for the respondent, opposed the application. The respondent, he said, was willing to allow access at all reasonable hours, and he submitted that the rule should not be made absolute as regards providing the applicants with a key because it might mean serious loss to his client if the applicant's servants were allowed to pass through the respondent's rooms at all hours of the night.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was contended for the respondent that a formal lease should have been concluded between the parties, but such a lease would have been on the lines of the letter which formed the basis of the contract between the parties, and the terms of the letter were clear: "We further reserve full use of the attic room and the full free right of approach to the room." The respondent, in his reply, accepted the lease on the conditions named. No doubt it was a very great inconvenience, but that should have been thought of before the respondent accepted the condition but once having accepted it he was bound by it. It seemed to his lordship that the arrangement was a very reasonable one, that a duplicate key should be given to the petitioners, and of course the petitioners would be responsible for the conduct of their servants. The rule nisi must be made absolute, with costs.

Ex parte DE WAAL AND SCHREIBER.

Mr. Burton appeared for the petitioner De Waal, and Mr. Benjamin for the petitioner Schreiber.

Mr. Burton said there were two petitions from gentlemen who both desired that they should be appointed sole trustee in the estate of J. J. Kritzing, of Uniondale. This was a competition for the trusteeship, and one of the present applicants had a majority in value and the other in numbers, and the Magistrate by an oversight declared Mr. Schreiber to have a majority in value, and declared him elected, but he had since found that this was erroneous, and the only thing to do was to make an application to Court. Mr. De Waal, who was an attorney of this Court, practising at Uniondale and a creditor in the estate for £198, had offered to act jointly with Mr. Schreiber, but Mr. Schreiber declined because he did not think they would agree. Affidavits were put in by both parties, and after hearing argument his lordship said that on the whole he had come to the conclusion that it would be well if the two applicants, Mr. De Waal and Mr. Schreiber, were to act together. He therefore appointed them provisional trustees in the estate, and said if Mr. Schreiber refused to act with Mr. De Waal the latter would be appointed sole provisional trustee.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP
and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

APPEALS.

REX V. HESS. { 1901.
Nov. 7th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mossel Bay, the appellant having been found guilty in the court below of a contravention of paragraph 2, section 21, of the Municipal regulations, and fined £4, or one month's imprisonment with hard labour. Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; the respondent did not appear.

Mr. Gardiner said that the notice of appeal had been served upon the Municipality of Mossel Bay and Mr. C. W. Black (the complainant). The charge against the accused was that "upon or about the 2nd September, at or near Mossel Bay, he did wrongfully and unlawfully allow certain goats, his property, to run at large on the property of C. W. Black, Mossel Bay, without permission of the owner of the said property." Mr. Black, in his evidence, said that he assessed the damage done to his land at £10. The defendant said that the complainant Black had accepted trespass money in respect of the 3rd November. The bye-law was in the following terms: "The owner of any wild beast, wild bird, pig, or goat, who shall allow the same to run at large on a public thoroughfare or private property without the permission of the owner shall be liable for such offence to a penalty not exceeding £5 sterling."

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he found the defendant guilty of allowing his goats to trespass on the 28th and 30th August and 1st and 2nd September. On these dates the complainant did not avail himself of the provisions of the Pounds and Trespass Act. The complainant now summoned the defendant under the Municipal bye-laws. He (the Magistrate) dismissed the exception taken by the defendant to paragraph 2 on the ground that the bye-laws was ultra vires.

Mr. Gardiner, in reply to the Court, said that notice of the appeal had not been served upon the Attorney-General.

Maasdorp, J., said that they had better have that informality rectified before the matter proceeded further. On the face of the record, it appeared that the case was Rex v. Hess, and the Crown must therefore be notified.

The matter was ordered to stand over pending service of notice upon the Attorney-General.

REX V. MONTSIOA.

{ 1904.
Nov. 7th.
" 14th.

Divisional Council—Native Reserve—British Bechuanaland Proclamations 29 of 1887, 148 and 432 of 1896—Act 38 of 1899—Ultra vires.

The Divisional Council of M. was constituted and its boundaries defined by B.B. Proclamation 29 of 1887, which provided that no Divisional Council should have jurisdiction within any native reserve. Boundaries of the several fiscal divisions of B.B. were fixed by Proclamation 148 of 1896 and the Molopo native reserve, of which the Stad Mafeking forms a part, was thereby included in the division of M. By Proclamation 432 of 1896, the division of M. was divided into six districts, within none of which the Molopo reserve fell. The Magistrate held that the Stad M. nevertheless fell under the jurisdiction of the Divisional Council of M. by Act 38 of 1899, and that the Council had, therefore, power to impose a dog tax within the said Stad.

Held on appeal, that as the Divisional Council of M. depended for its local jurisdiction on Proclamation 432 of 1896, and as the Stad M. does not fall within any one of the six sub-divisions of the division of M., the Council has no jurisdiction within the Stad and the imposition of a dog tax therein was consequently ultra vires of the Council.

This was an appeal brought by the Baralong Chief Montsioa, from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mafeking, who had fined him 20s. and costs for a contravention of the Divisional Council's dog tax regulations.

From the evidence, it appeared that a police trooper went to the stad occupied by the Baralong Chief, and demanded tax upon a dog which he found there. This the Chief refused to pay.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he found that the native reserve fell within the control of the Divisional Council of Mafeking. The exemption of the native reserve from Divisional Council control was repealed by the Act 38 of 1899, and, therefore, the Divisional Council Act of 1889 was operative throughout the division, and the occupants of the native reserve were subjected to the dog tax regulations of the Divisional Council.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the appellant; Mr. McGregor was for the respondents, the Mafeking Divisional Council.

Mr. Schreiner: The appellant was charged under No. 40 of 1889 of the Mafeking regulations. Our contention is (1) That Montsioa is not resident within the Division; and (2) That if Proclamations 148 and 432 of 1896 do bring his location within the Division they are ultra vires. See Acts 40 of 1889 and 30 of 1895. The Proclamation No. 29 of 1887 establishes a Divisional Council for Mafeking and marks out the limits of the different districts. These boundaries do not include native reserves. Section 2 expressly excludes native reserves from the jurisdiction of the Divisional Council. See also act 40 of 1889, sections 5 and 6. By these sections every division is to be divided into six sub-divisions which must follow the boundaries of a field-cornetcy. Hence, if land is out of a field-cornetcy it cannot be in a fiscal division. Act 41 of 1895, section 12, gives the Governor power to alter the limits of certain divisions but not to alter electoral divisions and the electoral division of Mafeking was co-terminous with the fiscal division. See Proclamation 62 of 1889 and 41 of 1895. The latter shows how carefully the Government reserved the rights of natives in native reserves: and this policy was not changed by the annexation of British Bechuanaland. See sections 16 and 17 of Act 41 of 1895 and Act 25 of 1894. Surely then the Court will not hold that a Divisional Council can, mero motu, extend their powers of taxation, etc., to native reserves without any new law or without any representation.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is there anything to show how these territories came under British authority?]

No, but that authority began with protection which was voluntarily accepted. Any other native territory can be brought under the Glen Grey Act, but no district in British Bechuanaland. That appears from the Glen Grey Act. We must read together the Proclamations 148 and 432 of 1896: otherwise it is impossible to follow Proclamation 148. I should like to be allowed to put in a plan of the Mafeking district to explain the Proclamation 148.

[Mr. McGregor (for the Municipality): I know nothing of the plan, but I am in the hands of the Court.]

[Hopley, J.: Of course the Proclamation was drawn up on the plan.]

That is so.

[The Bench called for the plan.]

I urge that Montsioa's stadt is a part of the Molopopo native reserve. Should the Court have any doubt on this point, I would ask that the question be referred back to the Resident Magistrate.

[Maasdorp, J. (to Mr. McGregor): Do you say that the stadt falls within the native reserve?]

[Mr. McGregor: I cannot say, but will see my attorneys.]

[Maasdorp, J. (to Mr. Schreiner): Which of these Proclamations do you say is to settle the question of boundaries?]

No. 148, and if the earlier Proclamation is not in accordance with it we say that earlier one was ultra vires, but No. 432 of 1896 shows that the two are not really opposed. My learned friend apparently relies upon Act 38 of 1899, which repeals certain Proclamations, but it does not abolish native reserves. It could no more do that than it could abolish a district of this Colony. If that had been the intention of the legislature we should have been placed in some field-cornetcy of other. Then if these people are in the Division, why are they not on the voters' roll and why is their property not valued for Divisional Council purposes?

Mr. McGregor (for respondents): I admit the difficulty as to the plan, but the appellant's whole contention seems to be that for purposes of dealing with taxation we must show that this stadt falls within a field-cornetcy. There should have been evidence as to whether it falls within the Division or not. The record may be imperfect, but as it stands it discloses no case for appeal. There is nothing to show that the stadt Mafeking does not fall within the village.

[Maasdorp, J.: We do not know where the "stadt Mafeking" is.]

The Court will always assume that the Magistrate has jurisdiction in respect of place.

[Hopley, J.: If he has, that does not prove that the stadt is in the Division.]

Proclamation 29 of 1887, section 2, places the law as to Divisional Councils under Colonial law.

[Maasdorp, J.: But that does not mean that if a subsequent law of the Colony does not provide for native reserves they are ipso facto abolished in British Bechuanaland.]

No; but see Proclamation 195 of 1894 and 220 of 1895, section 5. These bear on the question as to whether the area of a native reserve comes within that of a Division or not.

[Hopley, J.: But a Divisional Council does not put on a wheel tax and natives use the divisional roads.]

I admit that my argument from these Proclamations is not very cogent. Then section 17 of Act 25 of 1895 shows that land in reserves cannot be alienated.

[Hopley, J.: Suppose a native will not pay his dog tax: what are you to do, unless you sell him up?]

Possibly he might be imprisoned. Section 2 of Proclamation 29 of 1887 is really repealed by section 17 of Act 30 of 1899. Looking to section 4 of Act 41 of 1885 and taking it with Proclamation 95 of 1894 it would seem that a native reserve was a part of a division but a part over which the Divisional Council has no jurisdiction, for it would have been absurd to have expressly excluded the jurisdiction of the Council unless it had at least a colourable title to exercise jurisdiction.

[Hopley, J.: If the stad is in a native reserve, how can you get it into a fiscal division in face of Proclamation 148 of 1896?]

In Proclamation 29 of 1887 the district is defined and the native reserve is named and it is said that within that the Divisional Council has no jurisdiction.

[Hopley, J.: In every case the Proclamation carefully excludes the native reserves within the Mafeking district.]

There is nothing about the Malopo native reserve.

[Hopley, J.: No; because there the boundaries of the district only partly touch upon it.]

It is important that Act 38 of 1899 repeals the Proclamation. That Proclamation made these pieces of land so many refuges for all kinds of people, but all privileges were taken away by the Act. In Parkinson v. Attorney General (4 H.L., 100) it was laid down that the words of a taxing act must be strictly interpreted. We cannot deal with rules of polity. When the Act of 1899 laid down that these lands were to remain inalienable it would have been very easy to have expressed any other peculiarities which attach to these reserves.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): The wheel tax was imposed by a legislative act and the Divisional Council was merely made the collector of it. It was a most equitable tax, because the natives used the roads and it was only fair that they should pay for them in some way or other. It would seem to me that the Magistrate had not read Proclamation 432 until after he had given his reasons. Counsel for the other side fell back on the Act of 1899, but when Parliament passed that Act they had Proclamation 432 of 1896 before them. Act 148 of 1896 was absolutely worthless until they got their district and field-cornetries marked out. If the Act of 1899 put this reserve into a district for the purpose of a dog tax, the District Council was bound to value the property and impose divisional rates.

Maasdorp, J., intimated that, before giving judgment, the Court would communicate with the R.M. of Mafeking by telegraph, in order to ascertain whether he found, on the facts, that the reserve was included within field-cornetcy No. 1 of the division of Mafeking.

Postea (14th November).

Maasdorp, J.: The accused in this case was charged with contravening clause 225, sub-division 5, part 1, of the Additional Regulations of the Divisional Council of Mafeking by keeping in his possession a dog over the age of three months without paying dog tax thereon for the year 1904. He was convicted and fined 20s., or in default to be imprisoned for 14 days with hard labour. He now appeals on the ground that Proclamation 148 of 1896 made in terms of section 12 of the British Bechuanaland Annexation Act of 1895, altering the fiscal division of Mafeking as defined in the British Bechuanaland Proclamation No. 29 of 1887, is ultra vires, inasmuch as it was never the intention of the Legislature that the native reserves should be included within the limits under the control and jurisdiction of the Divisional Council. In September, 1885, a portion of Bechuanaland, which had until then being under a British Protectorate, was brought by Proclamation under British Sovereignty, and power and authority were by Royal Commission given to the Governor of that territory to make laws for it by Proclamation on the 5th of October, 1885. Laws and regulations for the government of British Bechuanaland were enacted by Proclamation, in which it was provided that the laws then in force in the Cape Colony shall, as far as applicable, be in force in the said territory, subject to the provisions of the Proclamation. Under the Divisional Councils Act 4 of 1865, which was then in force, a Divisional Council was by Proclamation No. 29 of 1887 constituted for the division of Mafeking, and the boundaries of the division were fixed. The laws in force in the Cape Colony with reference to Divisional Councils are by the Proclamation applicable to this Divisional Council; with the proviso, however, that the said Divisional Council shall have no jurisdiction over any native reserve. The appellant in this case resides at the Stad Mafeking, which falls within the Molopo native reserve, and this stad did not come within any one of the six districts into which the division was then divided by the Proclamation, whatever may have been the case with any other portion of the reserve. In 1895 the territory of British Bechuanaland was annexed to this colony by Act No. 41 of 1895, and under section 12 the fiscal divisions remained as they were, with power reserved to the Governor to alter them before the next session of Parliament. Section 13 provides that Divisional Councils shall be established for the several fiscal divisions by the law of this colony provided. All laws not repugnant to the provisions of Act 41 of 1895 were to remain in force until altered or repealed by law. By virtue of the powers reserved to the Governor under section 12 of the Act, the boundaries of the several fiscal divisions were proclaimed by Proclamation No. 148 of 1896, and undoubtedly the Molopo Native Reserve, together with the Stad Mafeking, fell within the boundaries of the fiscal division of Mafeking. Subsequently, in the same year, by Proclamation No. 432 of 1896, the division of Mafeking was for Divisional Council purposes divided into the requisite six districts, which corresponded with the six field-cometries. Although the Molopo Native Reserve and the Stad Mafeking fall within the boundaries of the fiscal division, they lie, as has been ascertained by reference to the Magistrate, outside the districts composing the division for Divisional Council purposes. It was contended on behalf of the Divisional Council that by law the fiscal division and the Council divisions are identical, and such contention is to some extent borne out by the provisions of section 13 of the Annexation Act. It was also argued that, notwithstanding the fact that none of the six districts embrace the Stad Mafeking, it yet comes within the territorial jurisdiction of the Divisional Council, under the wider definition of the fiscal division, given in Proclamation No. 148. The decision of the Magistrate proceeded on the ground that the Stad Mafeking comes within the fiscal division, and, consequently, falls within the area allotted to the Divisional Council, and that however much the jurisdiction of the Council may have been restricted within that area, under Proclamation 29 of 1887, full jurisdiction was conferred on it when that Proclamation was repealed by Act 38 of 1899. If it were not for the precise terms of Proclamation 432 some very interesting legal questions might have arisen, which, in view of that Proclamation, it is now unnecessary to discuss. It certainly seems to have been the policy of Government at one time, as expressed in section 2 of Proclamation No. 29, not to allow the Divisional Councils any jurisdiction in native reserves, but nothing can prevent the Legislature from making a change in that policy, as seems to have been done when that Proclamation was repealed by Act 38 of 1899. However, it is perfectly clear that Proclamation No. 432 strictly carried out the policy of the former law, and is not affected by the later law. Under the Divisional Councils Act, a division must be divided into six subdivisions, to be called districts, and the whole machinery of the Council depends upon the districts so formed. Nothing outside these districts can influence the constitution of the Council, and the division, for the purposes of the Act, must be confined to the districts. If it is said that under the law such division should accurately coincide with the fiscal division, then it would follow that Proclamation No. 432 is not in strict accordance with the law. But this Divisional Council, being the creature of the Proclamation in respect of its local jurisdiction, must look for such jurisdiction to the Proclamation, and not to the general law. The Stad Mafeking does not come under the Divisional Council, not being within any of the six districts of the division, and the imposition of the dog tax on the appellant, who lives in the Stad, was ultra vires and illegal. The conviction must, therefore, be quashed. The Divisional Council ordered to pay the costs of appeal, and costs in the Court below.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait; Respondents' Attorney: G. O'Reilly.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

RHENISH MISSION STATION (1901.
V. AFRICA. { Nov. 8th.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, for a direction to be given to the Resident Magistrate of Tulbagh to note an appeal in the matter of the Rhenish Mission Station v. Sampson Africa.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., opposed the application, and said that the motion raised an important point of practice that must be heard by a duly-constituted Court. He submitted that it was quite irregular to bring this motion before his lordship sitting alone.

[Maasdorp, J.: If it is not taken now, what will be the result? Is there such urgency that it must be taken now or fall through?]

I don't see why it should not be taken at two o'clock if the Court were properly constituted. There is a nice point of appeal practice involved.

[Maasdorp, J., said that the matter had better stand over until Thursday. It would be taken that the matter had been mentioned that day (Tuesday).

Dr. Greer: The only difficulty is this that supposing the Court should give us the order we ask for and direct the Magistrate to note the appeal, it will give us very little time to bring on our appeal this term, seeing that Monday is the last day.

Hopley, J., said that the matter might be mentioned again on Thursday.

HEYDENRYCH V. DUNMAN. { 1904.
Nbv. 8th.
" 10th.

Principal and agent—Payment to authorized agent.

This was an action brought by Benjamin Godlieb Heydenrych, of Benville House, Observatory, against Mrs. Mary Dunman, of Muizenberg, to recover the sum of £270 upon a promissory note, together with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per month.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he resided at Observatory-road, and the defendant resided at Muizenberg, and was married without community of goods to Charles Barnett Dunman, and was by him assisted, as far as need be, in this suit. On the 13th December, 1902, the defendant made and signed in favour of the plaintiff, for money lent and advanced, a promissory note for the sum of £270 sterling, payable one month after that date at the office of the plaintiff at Observatory-road, and the said note was overdue and unpaid, together with the interest due on the said sum from the 13th December. It was specially agreed between the parties that interest should be paid at the rate of 3 per cent. per month on the said sum of £270, and that defendant should pass a bond as security for this sum, with interest, and the defendant from time to time, by her agents, paid interest accordingly, down to the 13th December, 1903, and she passed the said bond. On the 14th July, 1904, this Honourable Court refused to grant provisional sentence against the defendant upon the said promissory note, and directed the plaintiff to go into the principal case (14 C.T.R. 566). Plaintiff prayed for judgment for £270 sterling, with interest at 3 per cent. per month from the 13th December, 1903, and tendered to deliver up the bond duly cancelled.

The defendant, in her plea, admitted that she signed a promissory note, wherein she promised to pay the plaintiff, or order, at Benfield House, 1, Observatory-road, the office of the plaintiff, £270, but she denied that the said note, or any part thereof, or interest thereon, or any part thereof, was overdue and unpaid. She admitted having agreed to pass a bond as security for the promissory note, and also to pay interest at 3 per cent. per month; but she denied that she had paid any part thereof through any agent of hers. She said that the consideration for the said promissory note was the sum of £250 advanced to her by the plaintiff, and the costs of passing and registration of the said bond or other necessary costs, and it was further agreed between her and the agents, on behalf of the plaintiffs, Messrs. Sibbett and Stephan, in the presence of the plaintiff, that any amount over and above £250 not expended in such costs would be refunded to her upon eventual payment of the said promissory note. Plaintiff, without defendant's knowledge, appropriated to himself out of the said £270 the sum of £8 2s., being first month's interest. The amount of the costs was not within her knowledge, but, to the best of her knowledge and belief, such costs did not amount to £11 18s., and she put plaintiff to proof thereof. The defendant, in accordance with agreement with the plaintiff, paid interest to Sibbett and Stephan, plaintiff's agents, in that behalf, and finally, on the 6th August, 1903, she paid them the capital amount of £270, with interest thereon to that date; the said agents, on behalf of the plaintiff, gave her receipts for the amounts so paid by her, and no other receipts were given to her by the plaintiff. She prayed that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed, with costs.

For a claim in reconvention, she said that the defendant had not refunded to her any part of the aforementioned sum of £20 sterling, and prayed that Heydenrych be condemned to pay her the sum of £20 sterling, less such sum as the Court may find to have been expended in costs as aforesaid, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per month from the 13th December, 1902, with costs of suit in reconvention.

The plaintiff, in his rejoinder, admitted that £8 2s. was deducted for the first month's interest on £270, and that costs in connection with the bond were deducted. The amount actually paid over by Heydenrych was £261 18s. He denied the alleged agreement to refund to the defendant the sum of £20, or any part thereof, and prayed that the said claim for £20 may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl), for plaintiff; Mr. M. de Villiers for defendant.

Mr. De Villiers intimated that the defendant dropped the claim in reconvention, except as to £8 16s.

Mr. Schreiner said that the defendant alleged that she paid the money to Sibbett and Stephan, as the agents for Heydenrych, and he submitted that the onus of proof of that payment rested upon the defendant.

Mr. M. de Villiers said he was quite prepared to go on with the case, but he wished before proceeding to apply for leave to amend paragraph 3 of the plea by the substitution of the word "loan" for "promissory note." The plaintiff prayed for judgment for £270 and interest, whereas the promissory note made no mention of interest, hence it was upon a loan that the plaintiff sued.

Mr. Schreiner raised no objection to the proposed amendment.

The Court allowed the amendment.

Evidence was called by Mr. De Villiers. Mary Dunman (the defendant) said that in November, 1902, she wished to raise £250, and approached Mr. Stephan, of the firm of Sibbett and Stephan, through whom she met Heydenrych. She met Heydenrych in Mr. Stephan's office. It was arranged that she should have a loan for £250, and that she was to pass a bond on her property at Muizenberg. Nothing was said at that time about a promissory note. She afterwards went to Mr. Van der Byl's office, accompanied by Mr. Heydenrych, proceeding there with Mr. Heydenrych in Mr. Stephan's cart. At Mr. Van der Byl's office she was requested to sign a promissory note, and upon her raising an objection, she was told that the note was only collateral security until the bond was passed. She was told that it would be all right; when the bond was passed, the note would not matter. Nothing was mentioned about Mr. Heydenrych discounting the bill. She was to pay monthly interest on the amount. Both Heydenrych and Stephan told her that she must pay the interest to Stephan at Sibbett and Stephan's office. She also inquired why she should have to give a promissory note for £270, when the loan was only £250. She was told that the money would be refunded to her, less the expense of passing the bond. Subsequently, on the 6th August, she repaid the capital amount, with interest due to that date. Mr. Heydenrych deducted £8 2s. 6d. by way of what he called discount. She could never understand why she was called upon to pay interest on the extra £20, over and above the loan of £250. She passed a bond for £300; she did not know why £300 was demanded, because she only borrowed £250. She paid £8 2s. interest in January, 1903, to Mr. Stephan; she paid the interest regularly each month (with one exception) to Mr. Stephan.

[Maasdorp, J.: What amount was paid?]

Mr. De Villiers: She paid interest at the rate of 36 per cent. per annum on £270—3 per cent. per month.

Witness (continuing her evidence) said that a few days after she had repaid the capital and interest to Mr. Stephan, she met Mr. Heydenrych in Adderley-street. Mr. Heydenrych said: "I hear that you have paid Mr. Stephan the money." Witness said, "Yes." Plaintiff then said, "Oh, he has not paid me; I suppose it will be all right." Witness denied that she had told Heydenrych that Stephan was her agent, or that Heydenrych told her that she must get the money back from Mr. Stephan and pay it to him (plaintiff) direct. She spoke to Miss Legrew in Mr. Stephan's Office. On or about the 30th October, she received a letter from plaintiff, saying that he had repeatedly called upon Stephan for payment of the money but without success, and that she must arrange for payment to be made to plaintiff direct. She told the plaintiff that she did not recognise him in the matter. After receiving the letter, she saw Mr. Stephan, who told her that it was all right, and that he had agreed to take over the loan from Mr. Heydenrych. She repeatedly asked about the bond and her title deeds. She denied having had conversation in the street with Mr. Heydenrych except on the occasion she had mentioned. Upon hearing the conflicting accounts from Heydenrych and Stephan, she tried to arrange a meeting. A meeting took place, at which Heydenrych and Stephan and Miss Legrew were present. Witness did not see the bond. Mr. Stephan then repeated that he had arranged to take over the loan. Witness asked Heydenrych if that were so. Heydenrych said, "Yes, if he pays me the interest." The bond was never returned to her. She denied that she had ever told Heydenrych that she had lent the money to Stephan.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: No commission was made to Messrs. Sibbett and Stephan for securing the loan. Whatever commission was paid to them was to come out of the sale of her property. On December 13 she received £100 advance from Sibbett and Stephan on account of the loan of £250. On the 20th, she received £150 on the same account. She had not had a statement of account from Stephan at any time. She did not know that she had been debited with £6 8s. commission on the 19th January. Mr. Stephan carried out a valuation of Cambridge House on the 18th June. There was no brokerage payable to Stephan, because the sale did not go through. Stephan had entered £187 10s. brokerage in his books. There was a hitch in the sale because the purchaser wanted a bond for five years. She did not remember Mr. Van der Byl saying that the first month's interest would be taken out of the difference between the loan and the bond. Her property was in the hands of Mr. Stephan before she sought to raise the loan. The brokerage was entered "for uncompleted sale."

Re-examined: She went to Mr. Tenant, her attorney, to ascertain why she could not get her cancelled bond. About that time Mr. Stephan often was ill, on account of his foot, and was unable to keep appointments at Mr. Van der Byl's office. When she paid £287 19s. 6d. to Mr. Stephan, it was a full settlement of accounts between Mr. Stephan and herself. The property that was being offered was valued at £7,500. If the sale had gone through, Mr. Stephan would have been paid brokerage and commission on the loan to the purchaser.

Further examined: On the day she made the payment of £287 19s. 6d., she drew a cheque in favour of Mr. Stephan for £100, as Mr. Stephan was in need of money. This was by way of loan.

Violet Katherine Legrew said she was in the employ of Messrs Sibbett and Stephan in December, 1902, when Mr. Stephan asked plaintiff if he would give a loan of £250 on property which he pointed out. It was arranged at Stephan's office that Mrs. Dunman should give a promissory note for £270, and that a covering bond should be passed. Mr. Heydenrych said that the interest was to be paid at Mr. Stephan's office. Witness made out a receipt on the 6th August for the repayment of the loan, with interest. A few days after the note had been paid off, Mrs. Dunman called at Mr. Stephan's office and discussed a meeting she had had in the street with Mr. Heydenrych. About the 11th November there was a meeting at the office between the defendant, the plaintiff and Mr. Stephan. Mrs. Dunman asked why the plaintiff was sending her letters demanding money. Stephan told her that it was all right, and that he had made arrangements to take over the loan. Heydenrych said it would be all right, as long as Mr. Stephan paid him the same interest. One day, later, she asked Mr. Heydenrych what security he had for the loan. Heydenrych admitted that he had no security, and said he was sorry now that he had let Stephan take over the loan. The general effect of the conversation was that Mrs. Dunman was absolved from all further liability for the bond. Mr. Heydenrych shrugged his shoulders, turned to one side, and said he regretted lending the money to Mr. Stephan.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: She twice went to Mr. Van der Byl's office for the cancelled bond of Mrs. Dunman's. Mr. Van der Byl said it could not be found, and he would send it over. Mr. Stephan told her to get the bond from Mr. Van der Byl.

Johan Carel Stephan, broker and commission agent, of the firm of Sibbett and Stephan, said he was applied to for a loan by Mrs. Dunman. The negotiations for the loan took place in witness's office. Witness corroborated the previous witnesses as to the arrangements that were come to. The reason why the note was given for one month was that Mrs. Dunman, at the outset, only wanted a loan for a month. Witness received at his office the interest from Mrs. Dunman, on behalf of Mr. Heydenrych. On the 6th August, 1903, he received from Mrs. Dunman payment of the loan and interest, he thought up to September. He had notified Mr. Heydenrych two or three days previously that Mrs. Dunman had sold the property, and that she would pay off the licence. On the previous Saturday witness took Heydenrych in his cart to a property in Chapel-street, with the object of taking over the loan from Mrs. Dunman and offering the property as security. Heydenrych seemed satisfied with the security proposed. After the payment had been made, Heydenrych assented to the transfer of the loan. Witness shortly afterwards got into trouble, and Heydenrych then did not seem to think that the security was sufficient. Witness admitted his indebtedness to Heydenrych for the amount of £250. The plaintiff had demanded the money from him. On the 29th October his firm received a receipt from Mr. Heydenrych for £29 7s. 6d., interest due from Mrs. Dunman and a firm called Nicholas and Co.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He denied that there were other people in the same position as Heydenrych and Mrs. Dunman respectively, and that he was holding money on behalf of the person who made the advance. He denied that he had received money that he had no authority to receive; he admitted that he had not devoted money to the purposes intended. He was allowed 2½ per cent. commission on this transaction between plaintiff and defendant, £6 5s. The amount was debited to Mrs. Dunman; witness received nothing from plaintiff. He entered in his books £257 5s. as the capital and interest received on account of Mrs. Dunman. Witness borrowed £100 from Mrs. Dunman; this was not entered in the books, because it had nothing to do with the firm. Heydenrych knew at the time the receipt of October, 1903, was given by him that Mrs. Dunman had paid up the capital and interest. He recollected that on one occasion Mr. Heydenrych told Mrs. Dunman that as long as witness paid the interest it would be all right; plaintiff then absolved the defendant from all liability. That, he thought, would be in December; if he had said so in his affidavit, on the provisional sentence, then it would be so. He paid £3,150 for the property in Chapel-street, it had been bonded for £3,000, and he applied to Heydenrych for a further loan of £300, the property being of the value at that time of £4,000. The property had not since been sold in witness's insolvent estate. He was in difficulties about August and September last year. He had speculated in landed property, and he found that the values were sinking; still his position was not so bad that he tried on all hands to raise the wind.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case. Benjamin Gottlieb Heydenrych (the plaintiff) said that Stephan was not his agent in this matter. He was just in the position of any broker, who applied for a loan. The arrangement for the promissory note was concluded in Mr. Van der Byl's office. The reason why the note was made out at £270 was because the defendant wanted £250 clear; witness had to discount the note, his charge being £8 2s. He did not authorise Stephan to act as his agent to collect the interest on the bond. It was not agreed that Stephan should be his agent. He never agreed to accept Sibbett and Stephan as his debtors. He had always known that Stephan was a man of straw; Stephan had often tried to borrow money from him. Witness inspected the Chapel-street property long before August, 1903, and refused to give a loan on it, because the property was already over-bonded. Witness saw Mrs. Dunman on the 28th October, and the latter then told him that she had paid the money to her agent Stephan, and that it ought to have been paid over to witness. Stephan afterwards told him that she had allowed him to have the use of the money. Witness denied that he ever promised to let Stephan have the money.

Cross-examined: Witness looked upon Stephan as the agent of the defendant. The latter remarked that it was very wrong of Stephan not to pay over to witness the money she had paid to Stephan. Witness admitted that the rate of interest was 36 per cent. per annum, but this was the rate that was offered to him by Stephan on behalf of the defendant.

The defendant and her witnesses were mistaken in stating that the negotiations for the loan were completed at Mr. Stephan's office. The negotiations were concluded at Mr. Van der Byl's office. On the 28th October he told Mrs. Dunman that Stephan had committed a crime in converting the money to his own uses, and that she ought to prosecute him.

Re-examined: He denied that he had ever expressed to Miss Legrew at Stephan's office regret that he had lent Stephan the money. He had had no such conversation with Miss Legrew, as she had described in her evidence.

Vincent Alex. van der Byl, attorney, Cape Town, said that he formerly practised under the style of Van der Byl and Van der Horst. The plaintiff had been a client of his since he started practice. He saw the parties to the suit in December, 1902, at his office, when he received instructions to draw up the promissory note and power of attorney. Witness explained that the note was made out for £20 in excess of the loan in order to cover expenses in the way of drawing up the bond, and so forth, and to secure the defendant's first month's interest, which was to be paid in advance. He explained to Mrs. Dunman that the bond that she had to pass for £300 showed no indebtedness, and that it was simply to cover the promissory note. Mrs. Dunman authorised him to hand the cheque for £257 5s. to Mrs. Stephan; this was the net amount remaining of the £270 for which she had given a note after the first month's interest, and the expenses of passing the bond and preparing power of attorney had been deducted. The plaintiff was in the habit of collecting his own interest and not appointing agents to do his business. Miss Legrew was absolutely incorrect when she stated that she twice came to witness's office, and applied to him for the cancelled bond. Miss Legrew asked for the transfers, but never asked for the bond.

Cross-examined: No mention was made in the note of interest, because the note was only for a month, and interest had been paid in advance. If interest had been mentioned in the note, it would have had to be paid twice over.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case. Mr. De Villiers said he submitted that if the interest now sued for was agreed upon, then the contract upon which the plaintiff was suing was entered into antecedent to the promissory note. He denied that the defendant had set up a novation. The defendant said that the plaintiff and Mr. Stephan agreed that the money which the defendant had paid should be held on loan by Mr. Stephan. The plaintiff had shown a certain amount of craft in getting this poor woman, to whom he gave £261 odd, to sign a document in which she promised to pay £270, and, moreover, had verbally agreed to pay 36 per cent. That craft was shown throughout. It was shown in his evidence, it was shown in the making up of his books, and in his giving a receipt on the 20th October, in which Mrs. Dunman's name was purposely mentioned for an obvious reason. The plaintiff in that receipt had simply manufactured evidence for himself. He submitted that the defendant's case that she had made one payment to the plaintiff of the loan had been established.

Mr. Schreiner said that his learned friend had spoken in very critical terms of the plaintiff. It could not be because he took up an unduly high measure of interest. Mr. Heydenrych took a high rate of interest, but Mrs. Dunman wanted this loan very much, and persons like Mr. Heydenrych often ran very great risk in advances they made. It did not follow, because they carried on a business of that kind, that such persons were to be discredited in regard to the facts. Counsel asked whether it was probable that a man so accustomed to money-lending transactions as the plaintiff would be likely to lend money to people without security, as he was alleged to have done to Stephan? He thought not. He contended that everything pointed clearly to the fact that Messrs. Sibbett and Stephan were the agents of the defendant throughout. There was no shred of evidence to show that Sibbett and Stephan were acting as the agents of the plaintiff, or had been appointed by him as his agents. As to the so-called "craft" of the plaintiff in regard to

[Hopley, J.: How can you show that you did not take an unfair advantage of the other creditors?]

We never bound ourselves to accept 5s. in the pound; and if any such promise was made, it was obtained by misrepresentation. If the signing of that document had no influence on the other creditors, there was nothing fraudulent in the transaction. Our signature could not have influenced their signatures, as all the others had already signed. As to duress, there is no evidence of legal duress.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Hermann left the other creditors under the impression that he would sign. If he afterwards changed his mind, should he not have given the other creditors notice of this?]

There is nothing to show that such notice was not given, and if there was any fraud in the transaction, that should have been specially pleaded.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): No consideration includes illegal consideration. Cohen's evidence shows very clearly the mala fides of the whole transaction, and shows in what sense the term "no consideration" was pleaded. If the plaintiffs want to go behind their receipt they must proceed by way of restitutio in integrum.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the Magistrate said that he accepted the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff, and he did not fully accept the evidence on behalf of the defendants. Now, I am quite prepared to decide the case upon the evidence given by the plaintiff himself. He admits in the early part of his evidence that he attended a meeting of the creditors of the defendant, and that he agreed to accept 5s. in the £1, but he added that on inquiry he found that the defendants had not given a correct statement. He does not say, however, that the creditors were ever informed that he resiled from the agreement and in point of fact on the 10th August when the plaintiff was asked to sign this agreement he did ultimately sign it. Now, it is important to read the terms of that agreement which the plaintiff signed. It says: "The undersigned creditors of Mr. Solomon Cohen, of 4, Wale-street, hereby agree to accept 5s., in the £1 in full satisfaction of all claims we may have against him as per the following statement showing claims and dividends set opposite to our respective signatures." On the same day he gave a receipt. That receipt is not quite as full as the document I have just read, but there he says: "Received the sum of £12 6s. 6d. in settlement, being payment of 5s. in the £1 on your account." But reading this receipt together with the agreement it is clear there was an agreement with the plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should accept 5s. in the £1 in full settlement. After that agreement had been made it is clear that the plaintiff could no longer sue the defendant for the balance of the account. That point was definitely decided in the case of Malan v. Secretain and Co. (Noord R. 94). Then, although the defendant was not bound to pay, a promissory note was passed by him dated five days afterwards, by which he promised to pay this amount. In my opinion there is no consideration for that promissory note. The defendant was not bound to pay the balance, and he gave a note for what he was compelled to pay. There is no consideration, and the Magistrate, upon the evidence ought to have sustained the defence. But I go further, and quite agree with the contention of the defendant that if there was consideration it was wholly invalid consideration, because the plaintiff had been present at the meeting of creditors, and had led the other creditors to believe that he joined in this arrangement to receive 5s. in the £1, and if he afterwards changed his mind it was his duty to inform the other creditors that he had changed his mind. If he did not do this any private arrangement with the debtor by which he is to receive his full claim is a fraud upon the other creditors. I am of opinion, that the Magistrate erred in his judgment, and that the appeal should be allowed, with costs in this Court, and judgment entered for the defendant with costs in the Court below.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellants' Attorneys: Friedlander and Du Toit; Respondent's Attorney: A. W. Steer.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

COCHRANE AND CHERRY V. { 1904.
WOODSTOCK COUNCIL AND { Nov. 14th.
OTHERS.

Mr. Schreiner said that before Mr. Justice Maasdorp left the Bench he would like to mention this matter, which was a motion by the defendants in the action for a new trial. The trial was heard before his lordship and a jury, and the grounds of the motion for a new trial were a mis-direction to the jury by his lordship on a point of law, that the verdict was contrary to the weight of evidence, and that the damages were excessive. At the hearing a stay of execution was granted until the 15th inst., so that the time allowed had now almost expired, and it seemed doubtful whether the motion would be reached before that date. He applied for a further stay of execution pending the decision of the Court on the motion.

Sir H. Juta (for the defendants) assented to the application.

De Villiers, C.J., said that stay of execution would be granted until a further order of Court, and in the meantime the Court would consider about a day for the hearing of the motion.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Gilbert Percy Sheldon, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the admission of Hjalmar Reitz, as an advocate. Petitioner had applied for admission to the High Court of the Transvaal, but it was necessary that he should first be admitted to the Cape bar.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court at Pretoria.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MALCOMES AND CO. V. { 1904.
CARY. { Nov. 14th.

Mr. McGregor moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for the sums of £265 and £149 2s., respectively, with interest and costs, the defendant (a merchant at Tarkastad), having given the notes in favour of H. B. Cary. The notes were dated the 9th February, 1903, and were payable on the 8th May, 1903.

The affidavit of the defendant said that an arrangement was arrived at in connection with the accounts between deponent and H. B. Cary, showing a balance in favour of deponent of £106 odd. Plaintiffs had approved of this settlement. In the adjustment deponent was debited with the two promissory notes. The estate of H. B. Cary was now being finally sequestrated.

The replying affidavit of a partner in the plaintiff firm denied that they had assented to the alleged adjustment of accounts between defendant and H. B. Cary, or that Conrad, who was referred to as their representative, had any authority to assent. A bookkeeper, named Mumm, who had been employed in insolvent firm, in an affidavit deposed that the balance-sheets of the insolvent estate of H. B. Cary did not contain any liability to Cary on the 28th February, 1902, or 28th February, 1903, when it was supposed to be in existence. He never believed in the counter-claim.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for defendant.

De Villiers, C.J., in refusing the application, said there were several matters upon which there were grave doubts, and they could be gone into in the principal case. At present provisional sentence would be refused, the plaintiff to go into the principal case, costs to abide the result.

ROUX AND COLLARD V. COSAY.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest at 6 per cent. and costs.

Mr. Alexander put in the affidavit of the defendant, who asked for time, on the ground of the sudden death of her husband, who had had charge of the property. If given time, she could easily liquidate the plaintiffs' claim, and £150 would be paid within a fortnight.

Mr. Roux pointed out that Mr. Collard was waiting to leave for England, and had given up his position.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was one of those cases in which it would be unreasonable to expect the respondent to be in a state of mind to conduct the negotiations. The order would be granted and the property declared executable, but there would be a stay of execution for six weeks, on condition, fourteen days from date, £150 was paid to the plaintiff on account.

LOUW V. WINTERBACH.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on three promissory notes for £30 15s., £44 1s. 7d., and £20.

Granted.

VISSEK AND CO. V. JARUS AND BENNETT.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £35.

Granted.

PRETORIUS V. VAN WYK.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £850, being the first instalment.

Granted.

LINDENBERG AND DE VILLIERS V. WESNER.

Mr. Close (for the plaintiffs) moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court for £43, including costs.

The defendant said if he was given time, he could pay. He was a farmer on the Flats, and had lost heavily through bad crops.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the first day of next term, the defendant in the meantime to make an effort to pay.

SMIT V. MAKATESI.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for provisional judgment for the sums of £22 7s., £133 17s. 6d., and £4 5s. 2d., on unsatisfied judgments of the Magistrate's Court, and to have certain property declared executable.

Granted.

KATZ AND CO. V. SHEMER.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £31 18s., less two instalments paid on account.

Granted.

S.A. MUTUAL V. VERSTER.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment for interest on a mortgage bond for £56 13s. 4d., on a bond for £2,000.

Granted.

ESTATE JONKER V. JONKER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £32, capital on a mortgage bond, with interest at 6 per cent. from December, 1880, which was fixed at £32. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also asked that the property be declared executable.

Granted.

NATIONAL BANK V. KRAEMER AND CO.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £72 and £162 5s. 7d., with £11 1s. 10d. for stamps.

Granted.

HUGO V. SNYDERS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with 6 per cent., less interest paid, and that the property be declared executable.

Granted.

DUTHIE V. UHRBROOK.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest at 6 per cent.

Granted.

ESTATE CHINN V. JOHANNES.

Mr. Jeppe moved for provisional judgment on a broker's note for £1,500, less £100, with interest and £5, on an undertaking signed by the defendant's attorneys, to pay expenses on his behalf.

The defendant stated he would be able to pay the money if he got time.

Provisional sentence was granted, with stay of execution for 30 days.

S.A. MUTUAL V. ERASMUS.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment for interest on a mortgage bond for £34.

Granted.

ROWE V. MCGARRY.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied award, which was made a rule of Court. The defendant, it was stated, had paid the capital, but the taxed costs, £9 11s., were not paid yet.

The defendant appeared, and said that his business was very unsettled.

The defendant was ordered to pay £1 a month, the first payment to be made on the 1st December, the decree to be suspended in the meantime.

BONSIEL AND CO. V. BEHN.

Mr. Russel moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court for £54 6s. 7d., less £10 paid on account.

Granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HOLIDAY V. JOHNS, { 1904.
 { Nov. 14th.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £52 rent, plaintiff tendering return of certain four shares held as security.

Order granted.

DE VILLIERS V. HAUPT.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment for the sum of £70, being certain money deposited with the defendant to be advanced on a mortgage.

Order granted.

PHILIP BROS. V. COMBRINK.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £115 odd, goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

NETHERLANDS BANK V. BRAND.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, in terms of the plaintiff's declaration, for £500, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

BROWN V. KELLY.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £30 11s. 6d., money lent and advanced, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

WOOLVEN V. MITCHELL.

Mr. Pittman moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £141 15s., with interest and costs, and also for an order of ejectment from certain premises in Station-road, Observatory.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Russell moved for the rehabilitation of Robert Charles Donaldson.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte THE DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH, COLEBERG.

Mr. Jeppe moved, as a matter of urgency, for a temporary interdict restraining the Colesberg Municipality from supplying water to the so-called dry erven in the Municipal limits to the detriment of the water erven held by the petitioners, and in conflict with the contract entered into between the parties.

Rule granted, to operate as an interdict, returnable on the 12th December, with leave to the respondents to apply in the meantime for discharge of interdict.

Ex parte METELERKAMP.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted.

Ex parte PIETERSE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted.

DIMDORE V. DIMDORE.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order requiring the respondent (the husband) to provide funds to enable the applicant to institute an action for divorce and also for alimony.

Mr. Upington (for the defendant) said he was instructed not to oppose the application, and to leave the matter in the hands of the Court.

The Court ordered the defendant to pay over to the applicant £50, to enable her to institute an action, and £10 per month as maintenance, pending result of the action, costs to be costs in the cause.

A motion was also standing in the list for an interdict, in which the parties were Dimdore v. Dimdore and Others.

This was ordered to stand over till the 12th December.

Postea (December 15th).

Mr. Close, on behalf of the respondents, Clarke and Bohn, moved for a rule nisi, interdicting certain goods, to be set aside. Mr. Alexander appeared for the applicant in the interdict, Mrs. Dimdore.

Mr. Close stated that the petitioner was Mrs. Dimdore, wife of Alexander Dimdore, who had carried on business as a clothier and outfitter, at Main-road, Claremont. Mrs. Dimdore was married to her husband in community, and she intended to institute an action for judicial separation on the ground of her husband's continual cruelty towards her, and threats to take her life. She had moved the Court for alimony, but in the meantime the goods, shop fittings, and so forth had been taken possession of by the respondents, Clarke and Bohn, and removed to Cape Town, and her husband had absconded, and left his wife penniless and without means of bringing her action. Mr. Close read the affidavits of Max Clarke and J. Wolff, of Wynberg, showing that Clarke and Bohn had bought the stock, and shop fittings in October last for £200. Clarke said that at the time he made the purchase, Dimdore assured him that there was no legal obstacle against his concluding the sale, and that he had no outstanding liabilities. Wolff introduced Clarke to the respondent Dimdore. Clarke denied that he had any reason to believe that there was any claims against the estate of Dimdore, nor was he aware that Mrs. Dimdore was contemplating a suit against her husband.

Mr. Alexander was about to read a replying affidavit by Mrs. Dimdore, when

Mr. Close again rose, and called the attention of the Court to this affidavit, which, he said, contained many statements that ought never to have appeared on affidavit. She said "From inquiries I have ascertained," and referred to other matters, of which she had no personal knowledge.

Mr. Alexander contended that the objections of counsel would be more in order when the Court had heard the affidavit. He submitted that in the peculiar circumstances of the case, the petitioner was quite justified in making such an affidavit, considering that it was alleged that there had been collusion between the respondents. The respondent, Max Clarke, said that he could not find that there were any claims against Dimdore, while inquiries showed that there were a number of tradespeople in Cape Town to whom Dimdore owed money. Mr. Alexander was proceeding to read the affidavit of the petitioner, when Hopley, J., interposed, and said it seemed to him that the deponent imported into her affidavit a good deal of matter that should not have appeared.

Mr. Alexander said that the taxing master could tax off unnecessary matter. He proceeded to read the affidavit further, when Hopley, J., pointed out that the Deputy-Registrar had made inquiries, but he had been unable to find that a copy had been filed with the Court of this largely irrelevant affidavit, made up in a most peculiar way.

Mr. Alexander said that, under the circumstances, he should have to apply for an adjournment until a copy of the affidavits could be filed.

Hopley, J., granted an adjournment for twenty minutes, and informed Mr. Alexander that while he was having a copy of the affidavits prepared, he should look up an authority on which to base his claim.

Later on the matter was resumed.

Hopley, J., said that the affidavits had now been filed.

Mr. Alexander then continued his reading of the affidavits. The respondent, Alex. Dimdore, it appeared, had not been heard of or seen in Cape Town and suburbs since the 31st October.

Mr. Close said that he had answering affidavits denying that there had been collusion, and showing that the price paid by Max Clarke for the goods was quite reasonable, allowing for a fair margin of profit.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts

Hopley, J. said that he did not think that if Mr. Justice Maasdorp had known all the facts, he would have granted the rule. There were certain suspicious circumstances shown on the original petition, but the respondent (Clarke) had now produced a deed of purchase and a cheque for £200, drawn in favour of Alexander Dimdore. He did not think the fact that the husband may have had in his mind the idea of defrauding his wife or getting away from the domestic relations which subsisted between them could affect the question at all. If the original petitioner, Mrs. Dimdore, were quite certain that she could establish fraud and swindling between Clarke and Bohn and her husband, it seemed to him (the learned judge) that she should take steps to set aside the sale, on the ground of fraud and collusion. The rule nisi would be set aside, and the goods released from the interdict, the costs of this application to be paid by the petitioner, Mrs. Dimdore.

Ex parte JACOBS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for confirmation of the appointment of petitioner as sole liquidator in the estate of Sherriff Givingley and Co., carrying on business in Johannesburg, Port Elizabeth, and elsewhere. There was property belonging to the estate in Port Elizabeth, in respect of which the liquidator desired authority to act. The company had their head offices in Johannesburg, and petitioner had been appointed sole liquidator by the Witwatersrand High Court.

Order granted as prayed, subject to the petitioner giving security to the satisfaction of the Registrar in the sum of £500 for the due performance of his duties as liquidator.

VAN DER PAS AND OTHERS V. DUSSEAU AND CO.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order for the winding-up of the respondent company.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for the respondents) said that they were prepared to assent to the application, subject to Mr. Andrews being appointed one of the liquidators.

Winding-up order granted, the liquidators to be Messrs. E. A. Buyskes and John Andrews, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte VAN DER BYL, SMUTS AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the confirmation of a certain sale of property to Wm. Fouche, the petitioners being chairman and other officers of the second-class undenominational school at Riebeck West. Fouche, it appeared, was the principal of the school, and the property in question was used as a boarding-house. The purchase price was £1,000.

Rule granted, calling upon all concerned to show cause why an order should not be granted as prayed, rule to be published once in a Dutch newspaper, and once in an English newspaper circulating in Riebeck West, and to be returnable on the 12th December.

Postea (December 12th).

The rule was made absolute.

MAKGOSIA V. FLAG MINI.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order compelling the respondent to deliver to her a certain child, of which she was the mother. Flag was alleged to be the father of the child, but this the man denied at first, though now it appeared that he had claimed the child. Flag was at Aliwal North, and petitioner was living with her husband at Bloemfontein. She also prayed for an order for payment of her railway fare between Aliwal North and Bloemfontein.

An order was granted for the restoration of the child and costs of the application, and also for £10 as expenses of the applicant in removing the child.

SMIT AND VAN NIEKERK V. DUCKWORTH AND SMITH.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sue the respondents by edictal citation for £465 for goods sold and delivered, with interest. The defendants were last heard of in Clanwilliam.

Order granted, the edictal citation returnable on 12th January, and to be published once in a newspaper circulating in Clanwilliam.

Ex parte BRINS.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order rectifying the transfer of a certain piece of land, which the petitioner bought from the manager of the Standard Bank, at Oudtshoorn, and which was wrongly described. The petitioner never had any idea of passing the deed of transfer in trust for his minor children. Petitioner prayed for an order authorising the Registrar to rectify the transfer in order to enable him to deal with his own property. The affidavit of his wife testified to the correctness of the statements by the petitioner, and counsel put in an affidavit of consent by the major children.

De Villiers, C.J., said he could not do so without an inquiry. A curator would have to be appointed, and he appointed Mr. Russel as curator ad litem, with notice of the application to be served on him.

BUFFALO SUPPLY CO. V. NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. Close moved to make absolute a rule restraining the respondents from parting with certain shares of the company.

Granted.

Ex parte DRYENISH.

Mr. P. Jones moved that a rule nisi, ordered to be published for the cancellation of a mortgage bond be made absolute.

Granted.

BURDETT V. WIGGETT.

Dr. Greer moved that rule nisi be made absolute, calling on the respondent to show cause why certain moneys, to satisfy certain provisional judgment in the court, should not be declared executable.

Granted.

Ex parte SPIERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the cancellation of a certain transfer of property at Darling in favour of J. G. Steytler. The Registrar's report set out that the error was due to the Registry Surveyor.

Mr. Steytler was dead, but a rule might be served on his representatives.

A rule was granted, calling on all concerned to show cause why an order should not be granted, authorising the registration publication once in two Cape Town papers, and to be served on the executor.

Ex parte FEBRUARY.

Mr. Pittman moved for an order removing a certain executor in an estate, who was at present confined in Robben Island as a lunatic.

Granted.

Ex parte TRUTER.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property to the petitioner, who was co-executor in the estate of his father, Petrus Johannes Truter, with Mr. G. W. Steytler. The property in question was well advertised, and Mr. Steytler considered the price a fair and reasonable one.

De Villiers, C.J., said that under the special circumstances of the case, the order would be granted.

Ex parte WARNER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sell certain property in the estate of a native, named Bombani, who had left his property in trust for his children.

The matter was referred to the Assistant Chief Magistrate of Engcobo, more especially for his opinion as to the distribution under native customs.

Ex parte LE ROEX.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem, in the interest of certain minors, in the distribution of certain property, one-half of which his lordship had granted the sale of for liquidating certain liability in the estate.

Granted.

HIGSON V. HIGSON.

Mr. Russell moved for the appointment of a commission in England to take the evidence of the plaintiff and her witnesses.

Granted. Mr. Mackarness to act as commissioner.

Ex parte MENGERS AND VON LIESON.

Mr. McGregor moved for an order as to the registration of a certain trade-mark. Counsel was not aware whether the Registrar was represented by counsel, but his report was distinctly unfavourable.

Petitioners represented a firm in Berlin, and made application in May last for the registration of a certain trade-mark of a sewing machine. Messrs. Oppenheimer, of London, objected, and the Registrar of Deeds refused the application, on the ground that the owners should have made it. Petitioners prayed for an order directing the Registrar of Deeds to hear the application in their name. Affidavits were put in, giving petitioners authority to apply in their own name, and to have it transferred afterwards to the names of the principals.

De Villiers, C.J., said he could not disturb the decision of the Registrar. The Act contemplated that application should be made in the name, and on behalf of the proprietor, and the present applicants did not pretend to be owners. The application would be refused.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TRIAL CAUSES.

LATEGAN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1904.
Nov. 15th.
" 16th.

Fire—Railway—Negligence.

This was an action brought by Benjamin Lategan, farmer, district of Worcester, against the Colonial Government for £100 damages, in respect of a fire upon his land, alleged to have been caused through the negligence of the Railway Department.

The declaration set out that trains belonging to the defendant were run over certain lines passing through the plaintiff's farm. On the 23rd January, 1904, defendants ran an engine over the line through the plaintiff's farm. It was the duty of the defendant to construct and maintain and work the said engine, so that no sparks, living coals, clinkers, or fire therefrom should set fire to the plaintiff's land, and it was their duty to prevent any fire which might be caused on the said railway line from spreading to the plaintiff's land. The defendants had neglected their duty in that behalf, and had so negligently and improperly constructed, maintained, and worked their engine that sparks and so forth from the engine set fire to the defendants' railway line, which fire was allowed to spread to the plaintiff's land, and, as a consequence, he had lost a large number of blue gum trees and fruit trees, his grazing veld was burnt, and also his wooden fence. He claimed damages in the sum of £100.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal allegations, and admitted that it was their duty so to maintain and work the engines run by them that no fire therefrom, if the same could be prevented by reasonable care and caution, should set fire to the plaintiff's land, and also to prevent fire originating through the act or default of themselves or their agents from spreading to and over the said land. Save as aforesaid, they denied all the allegations in the plaintiff's declaration, and prayed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. P. Jones), was for the plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C., (with him Mr. Howel Jones), was for the defendant.

Evidence was called in support of the claim.

Benjamin Lategan (the plaintiff) said he was a farmer, and lived near the Breede River Station. On the 23rd January, he left his farm early in the morning, and came back a little before sundown, and got out at the station. After walking along the line and passing through his vineyard, he went to his house, and he then walked down to the place where a fire had broken out. He sent a letter on the same day to the Government, claiming from them the sum of £100 damages. He pointed out that the "down" train that passed his farm between 10 and 11 o'clock that morning threw fire into his summer paddock, and burned all the grass, besides about 300 blue gums, and about a dozen peach trees. Afterwards, in a letter to the Government, he stated that he had ascertained that he was wrong in supposing that the fire was caused by a "down" train, and that, as a matter of fact, it was an "up" goods train. Witness traced the fire. There was an embankment from the railway sloping down to witness's ground, which was separated from the railway by a wooden fence. The grass was dry in summer. There had also been a fire caused from the railway in December. Part of the fencing had been burned by a fire early in January. There was high grass near by. Witness spoke to receiving a notice from the Railway Department regarding the making of fire-paths, so as to minimise the danger of fires along the track. He received the notice in 1902. He gave the inspector authority to clear three feet on each side of the fence on his land. In some parts the path was made, and in others it was not. The palmietgat was left uncut. The path was not kept clean. Witness spoke as to the accuracy of a number of photographs (produced) of the scene of the fire. He said he traced the fire within three feet of the rails. He found cinders on the freshly-burnt place, along the embankment. Witness had no reply to his letter until May, when one of the engineers came to the farm to see about the fire-path. The engineer gave instructions to his men to have the fire-path cleared. The work was partly carried out, and was not completed until last week. A further fire occurred in October, and there was another outbreak last week. If the grass were kept clear between the fence he did not think any fires would occur. He did not think that the sparks from the engines were the cause, but rather the stuff that came from underneath. His losses included between 300 and 400 blue gums, 30 peach trees, and the summer grazing. He considered that the amount of the damage would be about £300. The value of the blue gums would be about 15s. each. The fruit trees were worth about £5 each.

Witness received this year a further circular from the department in regard to the making of fire-paths.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The paddock was also known as a vlei; witness called it a vlei. He was not aware that there was a fire on the vlei about half-past eight on the morning of the 23rd January. Witness went from home by the early morning train, and he would not have an opportunity of knowing what took place on the farm about 8.30 a.m. A report was made to him on his return from Worcester by his wife and his foreman, Le Roux.

By the Court: He had heard from the railway employees that they had taken up the position that there was a fire on the land at 8.30.

Re-examined: A fire-path was made in 1902, but the palmietgat was not touched.

Rudolf D. le Roux, overseer for the plaintiff, said that from the ground that he cultivated he could see the railway line. He remembered Saturday, January 23; witness was working in his garden in the morning, with his face towards the line. He did not see any trains pass in the morning; he saw trains pass towards Cape Town between 11 and 12 o'clock. He saw no fire or smoke in the camp, before the trains had passed; he saw smoke soon after a goods train had gone by. The goods train was preceded by a passenger train. No fire-path had been made on the site of the palmietgat. At first he did not take much notice of the fire, and after dinner he went to sleep. When he awoke the fire had spread from the railway line, and had burnt nearly all the gum trees. If the property had been his, he should have claimed a sum of not less than £150 as damages.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Had it not been for the steps they took to put out the fire much greater damage would have been done.

Hans Plessis, a labourer, in the plaintiff's employ, stated that the fire broke out on the line side after the second train had gone by in the direction of Cape Town. They did not take any steps at first, but after dinner they found that the blue-gums and fruit trees had been reached by the fire.

Reyno Palm, son of a neighbour of the plaintiff, said that the fire broke out about noon on the 23rd January.

Hans Dampers, a coloured labourer, said he did not see any fire at the point in question until about 11.30 a.m., when two trains went past. He saw a fire when the second train had gone by.

Gideon Francois du Toit, farmer, living near the plaintiff, said that in September, he made an examination of the blue-gum and fruit trees damaged. He thought plaintiff's estimate was too low, and should have been £200.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He counted about 350 gum trees that had been damaged; he reckoned their average value at about 10s.

Frederick Lindenberg, of Worcester, gave evidence as to a rough plan that he had drawn of the scene of the fire.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Wm. Heath, stationmaster at Breede River, said that Green, the foreman, went off duty at 7 a.m. on the 23rd January. Witness had had a list prepared of the trains passing through on that day, and also showing whether they were goods or passenger trains. Witness went on duty about 7 o'clock, and he did not take over the cash until about 8.35, when he went to his breakfast. On the way to breakfast, Green drew his attention to a fire on B. Lategan's farm; they saw smoke rising; they could not see a blaze. The smoke was rising on the side of Palm's farm, nearer to the station. Witness saw the smoke nearer to Mr. Lategan's house about 11 o'clock. When witness first saw the smoke rising, about 8.40, it was quite away from the line. His idea was that the fire had nothing to do with the railway. Nearer the dinner hour a fire broke out on A. Lategan's farm, nearer to the station. This fire was the subject of another claim. Witness went down the line to the spot on the following day, but he could find no indication as to where the fire had commenced, because the ground was black from a point near the fence away towards B. Lategan's house. About 11 o'clock on the 23rd January he saw the fire travelling towards the line. The gangers on the railway frequently destroyed the veld on the line side.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He did not regard the fire path as a "luxuriant garden of weeds." The wind was blowing right across the line towards Mr. B. Lategan's house; he could not say in what direction it was.

Joseph Green, foreman, Breede River Station, said that soon after the 8.30 a.m. passenger train had left, he observed heavy smoke rising behind the oak trees in B. Lategan's paddock, about 100 yards from the line.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The smoke was being blown across in the direction of Mr. B. Lategan's house. He thought the wind was blowing from the north-east. He should say the fire was not far from the blue gums when he saw the smoke.

By the Court: He did not think the smoke that he saw could have been rising from Palm's house, even though he had had a big fire.

Gert Danster, a platelayer employed near the Breede River Station, said that on the morning in question, between 9 and 10 o'clock, he saw a fire in the vlei, between the line and Mr. B. Lategan's house. The fire was outside the line fence. Inside the fence they had burned grass eight days before. The fire travelled towards the railway. He did not think the fire that he saw could have been caused by an engine; it was too far away from the line.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He had only been in Die's gang a few days when he saw this fire. He did not know what the present month was. When he saw the fire, it was not near the blue gums, and he thought it could not have reached the trees. The wind was blowing from Bain's Kloof.

Laban Die, ganger, Breede River, said that there was a fire on the 23rd January on Mr. Lategan's farm. He received a report from the last witness. Witness's duty was to put out all fires caused by the engines. Later, witness saw smoke rising; he walked along the line about half-past eleven, to catch the 11.47 train from Breede River to Ceres-road. He saw a fire at Lategan's camp; it was then coming nearly over the camp. There was no fire on the embankment. Witness had burned the dry grass on the embankment about eight days before; this had gone to the wooden poles of the fence, which witness replaced with iron standards.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He burned the palmiet in January in order to clear the bank. He went to Breede River Station on the 23rd January because of the report made to him by Danster, and of the instructions he had received to put out any fire on the line.

Patrick Bergen, railway inspector, stated that in January, 1904, he was in charge of the district. He first saw the scene of the fire on the 17th February. From what he heard from Mr. A. Lategan, he did not see Mr. B. Lategan. He could swear that 110 gum trees were scorched by the fire, and in that total he included every tree growing by its own roots. Certainly, not half of the trees scorched were destroyed, he calculated the number at about ten.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He was not the inspector of permanent ways. He thought it was better to inspect the place himself without calling on Mr. Lategan. He did not visit the farm with a prejudiced mind.

By His Lordship: He was so satisfied with the information he received about the fire that he did not think it worth while to speak to Lategan.

Thomas Holohan, locomotive inspector, said he examined the engines which passed the farm on the morning of the 23rd. The engines were in good order, and fitted to prevent as much as possible the spread of sparks. Small sparks could not be prevented from falling from the grid-way. It was possible that sparks striking the rails or the wheels might drop on to the embankment.

By De Villiers, C.J.: Whatever precautions were taken it was possible for the engine to set fire to dry grass at the side of the line.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite accept the proposition of the learned counsel for the defendant that the plaintiff can not succeed in this action unless he prove first of all that ashes and cinders from the locomotive caused the fire, which spread to his property, and, secondly, that the fire was caused through the negligence of the Railway Department. The defendant has produced evidence as to the appliances for preventing sparks from locomotives doing any injury. I am satisfied every precaution had been taken that could reasonably be expected, but the same witness was bound to admit that, notwithstanding these precautions, and notwithstanding the use of the best Welsh coal, fires had occasionally arisen from ashes and cinders, and that where dry grass was growing near there was every probability of a fire. The English case on this point can not be of much material assistance to the Court, considering the great difference in the climates between the two countries, the moist climate to England to a large extent preventing any great danger from sparks which undoubtedly exist in this Colony. In the month of January the veld is parched, and there is always a great danger of the slightest spark causing a conflagration, and, therefore, I consider the least that can be expected from the Railway Department is that they will keep the portion within their own control clear of grass, or any inflammable materials. That opinion has previously been expressed in the Supreme Court in more than one case, and it is an opinion that has been expressed by the department themselves, as evidenced by the circular of July, 1902, sent out to the farmers by the District Engineer. If the Government keeps the portion within their control clean, I will not say that should absolve them entirely from liability, but it should throw the onus on the claimant to show negligence. I am satisfied the fire-path, which was agreed upon by the plaintiff and the defendant, had not been kept clear by the defendant, and I think if ashes or cinders from the engine caused the fire, the Government will be responsible for not keeping the embankment clear of grass. I am convinced that it was caused by the defendant's engine. The defendant ought to have given the plaintiff the credit of being honest when he invited an investigation as to the cause of the fire, but the department kept him at arm's length, and ultimately made an investigation in the absence of the plaintiff. The department apparently preferred to take the report of their officials, and the only course for the Court is to give judgment for the plaintiff. In regard to the amount of damages, no doubt there is always a tendency to exaggerate the amount of damages, and I do not think it good public policy to award more damages than the amount actually sustained. The Government has important functions to perform towards the public and accidents do sometimes occur, and I think their liability should be confined to the amount actually sustained. The Court should look at the material damage sustained, which in my opinion is about £50, and judgment will be for that amount with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné; Defendant's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BACHELOR V. SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES. { 1904.
 { Nov. 16th.

This action was set down for trial by jury to-day.

Mr. Gardiner (in the absence of his leader, Sir Henry Juta, K.C.) appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for the defendant.

Mr. Upington said that, before the jury was called, he wished to make application for the postponement of the case. On the 10th inst. defendants applied to have the case postponed on account of a material witness being ill with enteric fever and unable to give evidence. The Court refused to grant a postponement, but made an order that the evidence of this witness (Mr. Polmear) should be taken on commission. Mr. Polmear's medical attendant, however, regarded the patient's condition as being too serious to admit of this being done, and application was now made for a postponement, the Court having intimated when granting the order for a commission that leave would be reserved to the defendants to move for a postponement on the day of trial. The case arose in connection with a contract for the building of a brewery depot and hotel at East London, plaintiff claiming damages for alleged breach of contract.

Affidavits were read in confirmation of counsel's statement.

Mr. Gardiner opposed the application, stating that the principal witness for the plaintiff had come from England, and it was imperative that he should return shortly.

After hearing counsel, The Court ordered that the case be postponed sine die. Hopley, J., intimating that it would be left to the attorneys of the parties, both of whom seemed anxious to facilitate the hearing of the action, to make the best arrangement possible with regard to fixing a date for the trial. Instructions would be given to the Registrar to set down the case out of term, and the question of costs would be reserved.

GENERAL MOTION.

FELTHAM V. SCHLATER.

Misjoinder of parties—8th Rule of Court.

The Court refused an application to amend a certain record by substituting the name of L. F. (married out of community to H. J. F.) for H. J. F.; holding that the 8th Rule of Court made it incompetent for the Court to grant the application.

This was an application calling upon the respondent (Wm. Lutley Schlater) to show cause why the record in a certain case, in which Henry John Feltham was the plaintiff and the respondent was the defendant, should not be amended by substituting as plaintiff, instead of Henry John Feltham, Louisa Feltham, married without community of property to H. J. Feltham, and by him duly assisted, as far as need be, the applicant tendering costs of plea in abatement. The action was for £75 damages, alleged to have been caused through the respondent, who was a tenant of Mrs. Feltham, having removed certain rose-trees and other plants from a garden, and having also damaged the house. Defendant tendered £15. The declaration alleged that H. J. Feltham was the registered owner of the property, and that the defendant filed a plea in abatement, saying that H. J. Feltham was not the registered owner, and that the lease was not between him and the defendant. Upon inquiry it turned out that it was not H. J. Feltham, but Louisa Feltham, who is the owner of the property, and that the lease was entered into with the latter. Applicant was ignorant of this until the pleadings were filed.

It transpired from the affidavits that Mrs. Feltham was absent from the Colony. Applicant, however, offered to give security for the costs of the action in the event of Mrs. Feltham not wishing to proceed with it on her return to the Colony.

Respondent complained that the action was a vexatious one, and that the applicant—the son—had an indirect motive in bringing the action. He (defendant) believed that the action was brought without the knowledge of Mrs. Feltham.

The applicant stated that his mother was aware of the proceedings, and he believed that she wished to proceed.

Mr. Upington appeared for the applicant; Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

Mr. Upington said the amendment was a purely formal one, and no prejudice could accrue to the respondent if it was allowed.

[Hopley, J.: As a matter of practice, have you any precedent for this course? Has a case arisen here or in England where the Court has ordered the substitution of the proper plaintiff for a wrong party in face of objection by the defendant, who comes into court, and says he is brought in by the wrong person?]

Mr. Upington: There have been cases both here and in England, where, upon exception to non-joinder, a person has been allowed to be joined. That is really the case here, because H. J. Feltham will have to be a party.

[Hopley, J.: He is not a plaintiff; he is just the legal person to assist the plaintiff.]

Mr. Upington said he quite appreciated that, on strict technical grounds, his client had not a leg to stand on, but he submitted that the Court would not in a case of this sort, where there was no prejudice to the defendant, allow him to push technicalities to the extent of expending costs on the plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner contended that to allow the application would create a very dangerous precedent, and would be directly in conflict with the 8th Rule of Court.

Hopley, J., said there were many reasons why he should have liked very much to assist the applicant in this matter. First of all, whatever the Court was in the habit of doing, as argued by Mr. Upington, in not allowing the prevalence of technicalities over equitable considerations, he, personally, was very strongly imbued with similar principles in his own feelings. He always tried to brush away technicalities, and consider the equities, but there was a technical side to the law, as well as an equitable one, and the technical side was regulated by strict practice and observance of the Rules of Court. He was sorry the present application was made, because it put him to decide between his own feelings, which were all in favour of a course which would avoid an accumulation of costs, and his due regard, as a Judge of the Court, for the practise of the Court, and for the observance of its rules. As to the merits of the dispute between the parties, he had not the slightest knowledge of them, and all he could say was that it seemed a pity that there should be what appeared to be a squabble about a matter of this sort. But that was not what he had to consider. His Lord-ship read the eighth Rule of Court, which provides that a warrant or power to sue shall be signed by a complaining party before action can be brought, and, proceeding, said that without such warrant from the proper plaintiff—Mrs. Feltham—the defendant could not be sued. It was going a long way, therefore, to call the breach in this case, a mere technicality. It was a technicality, certainly, but it was one of the things that was strictly required, and he did not see that it stood on the same footing with a plea of abatement in an instance where, say, a partner was omitted to be joined. He was now asked to put upon the record, as the proper person to sue, the person who ought really to have been there originally, and to let the proceedings go on, although they were improperly instituted. Even at the present moment there was no proper power from the right person to sue. To hold that the present proceedings could continue would be establishing a precedent which might create difficulties in the future, and it might bind the Court to make room for great laxity of practise. The respondent had, after all, stood on his strict legal rights, as he had a right to do. With all sympathy for the applicant, who naturally wanted matters rectified at the least possible cost, he did not think he could, with proper regard for the practise and rules of the Court, grant the application, especially when by so doing he would be penalising the respondent, who had, admittedly, done nothing wrong. The application must be refused with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

LAWRENCE V. LAWRENCE. { 1904.
Nov. 17th.

This was an action in which the plaintiff, Arthur Lawrence, claimed from his brother Robert transfer of certain six plots of land and damages. The circumstances were that at about the beginning of the present year, the plaintiff was in possession of these plots. The defendant had been living for some fifteen months previously with the plaintiff at West London on the Cape Flats, and both were, at about this time, anticipating a legacy, which would benefit each to the extent of about £100. The plaintiff was pressed for the money, and he endeavoured to mortgage these plots, but he failed. Thereupon his brother, the defendant, who was under obligation to him, decided to take the plots over from him for the sum of £100, this, the plaintiff alleged, being done with the stipulation that the ground should be re-transferred to him (the plaintiff) when he became able to pay his brother the amount advanced. Plaintiff now stated that he had repaid the defendant the amount loaned, and he accordingly claimed re-transfer of the land, according to the agreement. Defendant, in his plea, said that there was no such stipulation as alleged, but that the ground was bought out-and-out without any conditions whatever. He further stated that the moneys paid to him by the plaintiff, which plaintiff said were in repayment of the amount of money, were moneys due to him by the plaintiff irrespective of this transaction.

Mr. Gutche appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Close for the defendant.

Arthur Lawrence, the plaintiff, said that at the beginning of the year he kept a shop at West London. In about March last he was in want of funds, and endeavoured to raise a loan on the ground now in suit. The shop on the property was burned down in January. His brother was staying with him, having come to this colony some fifteen months previously. Defendant did some occasional services for witness, who supplied him with food, clothing, and pocket-money. At this time they were both expecting a legacy of £100, and defendant offered to lend him the £100, on the ground, stipulating that the money should be paid back by instalments, and that after repayment, the ground should be re-transferred. Witness was to pay costs of transfer. The legacy accrued in January, but there was some delay in sending it from England. The arrangement was that the ground should be transferred when the money came. Witness's liabilities absorbed his own £100. The arrangement between witness and his brother was made before the amounts of the legacies arrived. The legacy amounted to about £150 each. On the receipt of the money witness told his brother that, inasmuch as he had got £50 more than he expected, he would pay him (defendant) £50 off the loan. The transfer papers were then at the attorney's office, awaiting signature. Witness then gave defendant a cheque for £60, being £50 off the £100, and the balance in payment of costs. Defendant then gave him a cheque for £100. The reason he did not stop the transfer was because he had no for the balance of the £100. One morning, some time afterwards (in April), the defendant asked leave to marry witness's daughter. Witness objected, and then offered him £50 in notes, asking him to come to the attorney's office on the following morning, so as to get the ground re-transferred. He took the money, but did not turn up at the attorney's office next morning. Correspondence ensued in May. Witness visited the defendant's attorneys, and understood from what was told him by a clerk that defendant was willing to re-transfer the ground, and he wrote to the defendant congratulating him that "his better self had, at last, asserted itself." Defendant wrote that he declined to enter into correspondence with his brother, saying that there were serious matters between him and witness, and in a later letter, written the day before that upon which the action was set down for trial, he said that he had agreed to turn King's evidence against witness on a charge of arson. Witness took this letter to his attorneys, and subsequently to the Detective Department. There was no truth in defendant's allegation. Witness had been paid the insurance money on the property destroyed by fire, and had a few days ago entered into a policy on another property with the same company. Defendant came to this country unexpectedly; witness took him in, and kept him. There was no agreement with defendant as to payment of wages. Previous to his arrival, witness's wife, stepdaughter, and sister had assisted in the business, and witness had no need of his services; in fact, he had told defendant to go out and look for work.

By Mr. Close: Defendant was forced to leave England. He asked witness to go Home and endeavour to settle with his creditors, and witness went Home, but found no funds or property where-with to pay the debts.

By the Court: In England the defendant ran a sort of a loan society. He used the funds in his business, and was unable to meet his liabilities, and came to this country. Afterwards he sent witness Home to see if he could settle the liabilities. There was not nearly sufficient to pay off the amounts due to the members of the society. The power of attorney given to witness by defendant for the purpose of settling the debts expired before the legacy accrued, and therefore witness was unable to use this amount for the purpose.

By Mr. Close: Witness did not ask defendant to stay in his service at a salary of £6 a month. Witness had three shops, but defendant did not manage any of them. Defendant was not left in charge of the business when witness went to England. He left his daughter and a Mr. Hall in charge of his affairs. Witness was in a temper when he paid defendant the £50 in notes, but he did not think it necessary to get a receipt from his own brother. Witness could not remember exactly what the clerk at the defendant attorney's office said to him about the re-transfer of the ground, but the impression left on his mind, from what the clerk said, was that defendant was willing to re-transfer the property.

[Hopley, J.: Why didn't you, instead of transferring the ground, give your brother a mortgage on it?]

Witness: I had already tried to raise money on mortgage, and it was my brother's own suggestion that I should transfer the ground.

[Hopley, J.: But why didn't you offer him a mortgage?]

It didn't strike me. I had tried to get money on mortgage, and this seemed to me to be the only way out of the difficulty.

Beatrice Ligo, stepdaughter of the last witness, gave confirmatory evidence. Defendant had told her that her brother had sold him a piece of land, and that he was to sell it back again. He also told her that he would hold back the transfer until plaintiff consented to his marriage with witness. Witness had consented to marry him. After defendant left the house, witness and he corresponded. In one letter defendant said: "I am not prepared to transact business with anyone outside my own farm until my marriage. I think that is a fair offer. I have to wait, and others will have to wait." Defendant told her in July that if he could not ruin his brother in one way he would in another.

Mr. Gutsche closed his case.

Robert Lawrence, defendant, stated that when he came out here he intended going to Johannesburg. After seeing his brother, he was advised not to go, and his brother agreed to engage him at £6 a month. Witness was at work from six o'clock in the morning until the shop closed. At the end of January a fire took place, and witness knew that the plaintiff was going to burn the place down. The plaintiff was insolvent at the time. The money from the insurance had come in before witness purchased the ground, and there was no idea of re-transference. The ground was bought out and out, and witness got transfer. He never had any knowledge that his brother had the transfer deeds.

By Hopley, J.: His letter of the 6th May meant that he would re-transfer the ground if he was paid the same price. The £68 10s. paid to him was for wages, the salary due amounting to £90.

He did not receive any small sums of money from plaintiff and Beatrice Lawrence. He brought £35 away with him from England. He had enough money to carry him to Johannesburg.

In cross-examination by Mr. Gutsche, witness put in a letter signed by "George Weston," and written at defendant's dictation.

After some remarks with regard to the charge of arson, witness, in answer to his lordship, said he still hoped to appear in the witness-box to give evidence against his brother.

Henry Joseph Findlay, attorney in the firm of Findlay and Tait, gave evidence as to the transfer of the property. He gave plaintiff no reason to suppose defendant would be willing to transfer the ground back again.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said that, with regard to Mr. Close's argument that the defendant was in a better position than he was when in possession of the land, before a man could be removed from such a strong position the Court would have to be absolutely certain that anyone wishing to dispossess him would have to show clearly that they would have the right to have the land transferred to them. This difficulty therefore faced the Court at the start, and it was a difficulty which would have to be overcome before any judgment for the plaintiff could be given. The whole of the case had disclosed a series of somewhat strange transactions between two men, who were also somewhat out of the ordinary. Neither of them seemed to do anything exactly the same way as other men, and they had large gaps in their armour of absolute veracity and truthfulness. No plea had been put forward that the land had been transferred to the defendant to enable the plaintiff to defraud his creditors, and so defeat the ends of justice, and it was not suggested that there was any immorality in the matter. It was possible something of that sort might have been at the bottom of the transaction. Nothing to that effect having been mentioned, he had only to consider on which side the balance of evidence lay as to the truth of the allegation that there was an agreement that the land should be transferred. When the defendant gave a cheque for £100 to the plaintiff, the latter also gave a cheque for £68 to the defendant. That seemed to him to be illogical and wrong, and more natural, instead of two cheques passing, only the balance had been paid. The full amount, however, was paid on both sides. After reviewing the evidence, His Lordship said that both parties could not be considered quite honest, yet it would seem that the plaintiff's character would not seem to be so discreditable as the attitude taken towards him by the defendant. If there was any truth in the allegation of arson, then the letter written by the defendant was one of the most discreditable productions ever seen in a court of law. As the matter stood, His Lordship was inclined to believe the evidence of the plaintiff that at the time the ground was bought, it was understood that it would be transferred. He thought the money had been paid, and he did not believe the defendant's contention as to wages. Judgment would therefore be given for the plaintiff for the retransfer of the land, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

COWLEY AND CO. V. VASSIES. { 1904.
{ Nov. 18th.

Mr. Close moved as a matter of urgency for an order attaching certain bales of tobacco, the property of applicants, which was at present in bond at Cape Town, and for leave to sue the defendant, whose whereabouts were unknown, by edictal citation, for the purchase price, £96 12s.

An order of attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem was granted, with leave to sue by edictal citation, returnable 12th January, the order to be published in Johannesburg.

WIBER V. FISH.

This was an application on notice of motion to have a certain order of Court granted in October last amended, and to have certain property on which the applicant had a first mortgage bond for £1,800 transferred to him free of a certain lease which had been entered into after the bond had been executed to the prejudice of the bondholders.

The affidavit of the lessee, set out that under the terms of the lease between Fish and himself, he had a tenancy for a period of four years, and not for three years as stated by the petitioner. He had paid £48 for a year's rent in advance, and if the application was granted he would be put to great inconvenience.

Mr P. Jones was for the applicant, and Mr. Russell for the respondent, Macafini.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The lease in question was executed after the bond in favour of the applicant. When the interest fell due the applicant then sued the defendant, and an execution was ordered, and no protest was made on behalf of the respondent, the lessee, against the property being sold free of the lease. Accordingly the lease was not mentioned at all, and a purchaser therefore might fairly assume, as the mortgagee seems to have assumed, there was no lease upon the property, and notwithstanding the circumstance that the lease was not mentioned the highest bid was £1,650, far less than the amount of the bond. Clearly, therefore, if this statement is true, the mortgagee was prejudiced by the lease, because with the lease the property would have sold for much less. I consider, therefore, the mortgagee is now entitled to claim that the property shall be held free from the lease. The only question is one of costs. The affidavit of the respondent is to my mind wholly unsatisfactory. He does not say that he was not aware of the sale, and he doesn't say that he attended the sale. After he received this notice of motion, it was quite competent for him to ascertain the grounds upon which the Court ordered the property to be transferred to the applicant. The application is for an amendment of that order, and it is quite competent for the respondent to have got the information. Such information as is given by the applicant in this case, was sufficient, and it was quite competent for inquiry, but he closed his eyes, and now he says he was not aware of the application. The application will be granted with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

ESTATE TANTSI V. EXECUTOR. 1904.
TOBIAS ESTATE NCHELA. { Nov. 18th.

Native Succession Act, 1864—
Community of property—
Setting aside appointment of executor.

A native, to whose property Act 18 of 1864 would apply, having died, the respondent was appointed as executor, and two years after his appointment the applicant, a son of the deceased, applied to have the appointment and all proceedings thereunder set aside, alleging as a cause of prejudice that one-half of the estate had been awarded to the widow of the deceased, whom he had married according to Christian rites.

Held, that in the absence of an antenuptial contract, the deceased must be presumed to have been married in community, and that, although letters of administration were not necessary on his death, yet as the appointment had been made and the estate fully administered without any prejudice to the applicant, there was no good ground for setting the proceedings aside.

This was an application on notice of motion calling on the respondent, the executor of the estate of Nchela, to show cause why an order should not be granted stopping the administration of a certain estate for the purpose of administering it under the Native Succession Act of 1864, and for the setting aside of the executor, Mr Bolus.

The affidavit of Mr. Bolus stated that he was appointed executor in the estate of Sabina Nchela. The petitioner, by filing an account in the estate, had acknowledged deponent's legal status, and if the application were granted, the result would be confusion and trouble.

Mr. Buchanan (for applicant). The case of Xasa v. Xasa (1, E.D.C., 201) shows that natives married by Christian rites enjoy community of property under Act 18 of 1864. See also Tabata v. Tabata (5, E.D.C., 328) which shows that the estates of Christian natives living in locations should be administered according to native law under Act 18 of 1864. There Blain, K.C., argued that if the community came into effect it might happen that the whole of the property would be given away, and that the eldest son would be left with the burden of supporting the widow.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If natives marry according to Christian rites they surely enter into community. If they marry according to native rites, they must follow native law.]

I cannot contest the community as to half the property. We have no certificate of the second marriage. If Jonas was born before his parents was married, that Christian marriage could not prejudice his rights under native law. The information is meager. I should wish to point out that Act 39 of 1887 exempts registered voters from the provisions of Act 18 of 1864.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondent): Act 18 of 1864 does not apply to this case. It is not stated that deceased had a certificate of citizenship, neither Section 2 nor Section 6 of the Act of 1864 applies. This location had never been proclaimed by the Governor.

[Hopley, J.: Is it necessary that a special location should be proclaimed under this Act, or is not a general proclamation sufficient?]

Certain "Native Locations as described by the Governor" must mean locations proclaimed under this Act. The Act clearly refers to locations already proclaimed. The Act does not apply, because, in Xasa's case (7. E.D.C., 201), the man is said to have held a certificate of citizenship, and this would have been unnecessary if the Act applied. If the Master had no right to appoint an executor dative in the one of these estates, he had no power to make a similar appointment in the other, and my learned friend has no locus standi. The onus is on him to show on what ground this Act applies, and, if he can show that, he will show that he and his clients are out of Court.

Mr. Buchanan (in reply): Jonas was a registered voter, and therefore the Master was quite justified in appointing an executor dative under Act 39 of 1887, and we have a locus standi. It has never been argued that a special proclamation is required to bring a location under any special Act. Section 4 of Act 37 of 1884 recognizes all locations already established.

[Hopley, J.: That applies only to private locations. Act 8 of 1878 deals with public locations, but that is repealed by Act 37 of 1884.]

De Villiers, C.J.: The person in respect of the administration, of whose estate the Court is now asked to interfere, died as far back as 1896. Then in 1902, it would appear, the letters of administration were issued in favour of the respondent, and now, after the estate has been under administration for two years, the applicant comes forward in order to have all proceedings in this estate set aside on the ground that he, as a son of the deceased, is entitled to the whole of the estate. Now, the Court will not interfere with the administration unless the applicant can show that he has been prejudiced by it. If the testator was married according to Christian rites the presumption is that he and his wife intended to be married in community of property. Upon his death, therefore, his widow was entitled to one half of their joint estate, and there is nothing in Act 18 of 1864 to deprive her of that right. There was no necessity for letters of administration from the Master, but the question is whether after the estate has been fully administered, the Court should now set aside the appointment of the respondent as executor, and all proceedings thereunder, without proof of some prejudice to the applicant. The only tangible objection raised by him is that one half was awarded to the widow of the deceased, but that she was entitled to. In other respects the distribution appears to have been according to the customs and usages of the tribe to which the deceased belonged. The applicant having received everything he would have been entitled to if his father's estate had been administered under the Act, is not, in my opinion, entitled to the order asked for, and the application must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller; Respondent's Attorneys: Findlay and Taft.]

Ex parte WOOD.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the respondent to show cause why an order granted 20th October should not be changed by coupling Henry Richard Wood as a co-liquidator with Mr. Steytler. Counsel said that insolvent company, the Orange River Irrigation, Limited, were indebted to the East Loan and Investment Company to the extent of £3,500 on second mortgage. On 20th October certain creditors to the amount of £240 and £120 respectively, had the company wound up, and George William Steytler was appointed as liquidator. Petitioner and the directors were thoroughly acquainted with the farms, and it was thought that in the interest of the second mortgagees the petitioner should be joined with Mr. Steytler to liquidate the company.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the petitioner, and Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton), was for the respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the Government were creditors to the extent of £4,000, and they had no objection to Mr. Steytler, and Mr. Walbeck, the late secretary of the company, was in Cape Town, and was in a position to give Mr. Steytler any advice he required.

Sir H. Juta said no doubt the Government would be indifferent, as they were thoroughly secured.

De Villiers, C.J., said the learned counsel for the applicant had very fairly argued the matter, as if all the information had been before the Court on the first occasion, but he could see no reason to suppose Mr. Steytler would not be sufficient for all the purposes, and he felt confident that if all the information had been before the Court on the occasion of the original application Mr. Steytler would still have been appointed. The applicants could lay before Mr. Steytler all the information they possessed, and Mr. Steytler would no doubt give it consideration. The application would be refused, costs to come out of the assets of the company.

AFRIKA V. RHENISH MIS- } 1604.
SION SOCIETY. { Nov. 18th.

• Resident Magistrate's Court—
Civil action—Noting appeal —Leave to appeal.

The defendant, in a Magistrate's Court, against whom judgment was given in an action for rent, noted an appeal with the Clerk three days after the next Court day, under a mistaken impression as to the days on which the Court usually sat.

Held, that it was competent for the Supreme Court to give leave to appeal notwithstanding the omission to note an appeal on the next Court day after judgment, and as important interests were involved and the appeal was not shown to be frivolous, the Court granted leave to appeal.

This was an application to have an appeal noted against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Tulbagh. The affidavit of Wm. Coulton, attorney, set out, that notice of appeal was given, and that it was understood that November 4th was the Court day. The petitioner notified the Resident Magistrate's Court of the intention to appeal, and in reply the Magistrate's Clerk wrote that section 33 of Act 20 of 1856, had not been complied with. The notice should have been handed in on the 30th October.

Dr. Greer (for applicant). The court had always granted relief when through a bona fide mistake a technicality had not been complied with. Such relief had been granted in Smith and Another v. Pinto (Buch. 1868, p. 105). In Jones v. Cape Town Town Council (S.C.R. 13, p. 4), and in Hills v. The Colonial Government (Cape Times L.R. 13, p. 1124), the principle had been laid down that the court would always facilitate appeals when the only bar was non-compliance with some formality. In this case it was apparent that the mistake was bona fide as appeared from the intimation of intention to appeal when the judgment was given, and the fact that on November 3 the notice of appeal was sent and the cheque for amount of deposit. This was a test case, and large interests were involved. The rights of several hundreds of natives were really the subject in dispute. As it was a test case, it was emphatically one that should come before the Supreme Court, especially as it was alleged that a question of title was raised.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for respondents). An appeal must be noted within four days, and due notice must be given in writing, see Mossel Bay Municipality v. Wiggitt (2 C.T.R. 181). So also in appeals under the Charter of Justice. Montmort v. Board of Executors (4 Juta, 61). If this were a matter which should go further we might consent to an extension of time, but feel that a great injury will be done to the Mission if this matter is allowed to stand over. The case of Smith v. Pinto was only heard in camera, and is not binding on the Court. Mr. Coulton's affidavit is contradicted by that of the Magistrate. The Magistrate states that he said the next Court day would be October 31st. Jones said November 4th. He must have been mistaken. The rule as to noting an appeal on the next Court day is imperative.

Dr. Greer in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The case of Smith v. Pinto (Buch. Rep. 1868, p. 105), is an authority for holding that the Court has the power to grant leave to appeal from a Magistrate's Court in a civil case, although appeal was not noted in due time in terms of the 33rd section of Sched. B. to Act 20 of 1856. The 42nd section of the same Act confers criminal jurisdiction "without appeal or review" on Magistrates. The 4th section of Act No. 21 of 1876 for the first time gave a right of appeal in criminal cases, "provided that within four days next after conviction notice in writing be given to the Clerk of the Court of Resident Magistrate." This proviso was held in Reg. v. Simenloff (11 S.C.C. 419), to be imperative, but it was there pointed out that under the 48th section of Act 20 of 1856 the Court retained the power of directing an argument on behalf of the accused, notwithstanding that an appeal had not been noted. As to civil appeals there has been a right of appeal to this Court from its first establishment, and consequently the provisions that appeal should be noted on the next Court day after judgment has been held to be merely directory, and not excluding the power of the Court to grant leave to appeal notwithstanding the failure to note appeal in due time. The plaintiff's counsel admits that the case is regarded by the parties as a test case, and he does not allege that the appeal would be a frivolous one, but he denies the power of the Court to grant leave to appeal. The omission to note the appeal on the next Court day was caused by a mistake on the defendant's part as to the day on which the court usually sits, and accordingly the appeal was noted a few days after the time fixed by the 33rd section. It is a case, therefore, in which the power of the Court might be reasonably exercised, but the costs of the application will abide the result.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Applicant's Attorney: W. G. Coulton; Respondent's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn].

APPEAL CASE.

REED V. PORT ELIZABETH TOWN COUNCIL.

Malicious arrest.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth, in which the applicant unsuccessfully sued the Port Elizabeth Town Council for a malicious and wrongful arrest.

From the record it appeared that in the first instance the Town Council gave notice to a firm known as the Reed Combination to quit certain uninhabitable premises, and subsequently a summons was issued against four of the brothers Reed. The appellant, John Thomas Reed, was summoned, and he failed to put in an appearance at the Magistrate's Court, denying that he was a partner in the firm, and thereupon he was arrested and lodged in gaol. On coming to Court he was informed that the case against him had been withdrawn. He then sued the Town Council for £8 and £12 expenses, and damages, for wrongful and malicious arrest, and the Magistrate dismissed the case.

Mr. McGregor was for the appellant and Mr. Close for the respondent.

Counsel for the appellant having been heard as to whether there was probable cause for arrest,

De Villiers, C. J., said the appellant was not entitled to succeed unless he could prove malice, and want of reasonable and probable cause, and the Court below had found that he had failed to prove either. The evidence given in the case fully justified the finding of the Magistrate. The Town Council was undoubtedly misled by these different combinations which the plaintiff and his brothers had entered into for the purposes of business. What the object of such combinations was it is very difficult to see. There were two brothers in combination "A," two in "B," and when the appellant was asked he refused to give any information as to whether there was a "C" in existence. There certainly appeared to be no proof whatever of malice, and the arrest standing by itself would not prove want of probable and reasonable cause. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte GOURLAY, CAVANAGH AND CO.

Mr. Close moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the estate of David Israelson, in order to carry on the business. It would be detrimental to the creditors to close the bar. Petitioners were creditors in the estate to the extent of £3,074, and it was suggested that Mr. J. E. P. Close might be appointed.

Application granted, Mr. Close to have power to carry on the business.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

APPEAL CASES.

HAAK V. BASSON. { 1904.
{ Nov. 19th.

Resident Magistrate's Court—
Jurisdiction — Damages —
Trespass — Right of way —
Bona fide defence.

To a summons for trespass in a Magistrate's Court, the defendant excepted on the ground of want of jurisdiction, inasmuch as he claimed a right of way over the plaintiff's land. The Magistrate thereupon took the evidence of the defendant's witnesses, and finding that there was no prima facie case in support of the existence of such a right of way, he overruled the exception.

Held on appeal, that, as in the absence of such a prima facie case, the defence could not be held to be a bona fide one and that consequently the jurisdiction was not ousted.

This was an appeal by the defendant against a decision of the R.M. of Prince Albert, in which a judgment was given against the appellant for trespassing on the plaintiff's farm.

The appellant was summoned on a complaint by the plaintiff at various times, and especially during June last, for unlawfully opening up the enclosures on his farm and causing the plaintiff injury. The defendant excepted to the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that future rights were involved, and pleaded he had a perfect right to use the road in dispute. The road had been used for upwards of thirty years, and the defendant, in terms of the plaintiff's title deeds, claimed a right over the farm, and he was always ready to compensate the plaintiff. The exception was overruled, and an appeal noted. The Magistrate, in giving judgment, said that an occasional search up the mountain for stray oxen had evidently given the defendant the impression that he had an uninterrupted use of the road. If the evidence, he said, could establish a right-of-way, then thousands of servitudes might be set up.

Sir H. Juta, K. C., was for the appellant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

Sir H. Juta: The defendant (now appellant) wishes to go into the whole question of right of way. As the Magistrate upheld the exception this would be res judicata, and if that judgment stands the defendant is estopped.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate must take some evidence to show that the exception is bona fide. If a claim were plainly untenable, surely that would not oust the jurisdiction?]

The Magistrate cannot enter into the merits if his judgment would bind future rights. The facts that the defendant is now appealing shows that his claim was bona fide. The plea shows that a claim was not set up to this path, and was founded on a title to a via necessitatis. The defendant did not go into all the grounds of his claim of a right of way. If the Magistrate's judgment for trespass is to stand, the question of right of way will be res judicata, and future rights will be bound.

Mr. Burton: I admit that if it were shown to the Magistrate that prima facie there was a bona fide claim to a right of way, his jurisdiction would be ousted. Any defendant might avoid a just demand by setting up a bogus claim. The plaintiff is owner of these two farms. The defendant entered upon these farms and broke down our fences. He simply says: "I have a right of way." There is no evidence to prove this right of way. He says that he has a right to a via necessitatis, in virtue of certain stipulations in the plaintiff's title deeds. But he does not produce these title deeds; and he does but call some three witnesses, none of whom prove prescription.

[Hopley, J.: Suppose that in an action for trespass a defendant were to set up a counterclaim for a declaration of rights, would not the Magistrate's jurisdiction be ousted?]

Yes, but there was no counter-claim.

[Hopley, J.: It seems that the Magistrate was influenced by the merits to this claim to right of way.]

He alludes to it in his reasons for dismissing the whole case. The evidence of each of the witnesses is very vague. It has nothing to do with prescription, and does not go to show the bona fides of the counterclaim. See Myburgh v. Cloete (3 Menz., 564). This case goes to show that evidence must be led to show the bona fides of an exception to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. In Westfall v. Bartlett (1 E.D.C., 72) evidence was led to show the bona fides of the defendant's contention. In Bertram v. Wood (3 C.T.R., 167) the question of the Magistrate's jurisdiction as to further rights was again discussed, but there again the question of bona fides emerged.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But in his reasons the Magistrate does not seem to go into the question of bona fides, but rather enters into the merits of the claim.]

Evidence was not led for that purpose, but only to establish the bona fides of the defendant. That was the only question before the Magistrate.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Is title to land involved in a claim for a servitude?]

The exception was not taken on the ground of title to land being involved, but on that of future rights being bound.

[De Villiers, C.J., referred to Grutzer v. Maddox (3 H.C., 151).]

Some summonses show ex facie that a judgment would bind future rights, and in that case there can be no question as to bona fides. In this case the summons did not disclose anything of the kind, and hence the Magistrate could take evidence as to bona fides, but could not enter into the merits. He went further than this, and says that defendant's witnesses do not support his claim. I regret that evidence as to the via necessitatis was not put in, but the defendant did not go into Court prepared to do that. Why should he have done so?

Mr. Burton was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not denied on behalf of the defendant that the Magistrate had jurisdiction in an action for trespass, and it clearly lay on the defendant to adduce evidence sufficient to oust such jurisdiction. The defence was that the defendant entered on the plaintiff's land in the assertion of a right of way over it, and a counter-claim for a declaration of such a right would clearly be beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction. If this was a bona fide defence it would, if established, extinguish the plaintiff's right to damages for such trespass, and, upon the principles laid down in Bertram v. Wood (10 Juta 177), the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction. The Magistrate, therefore, very properly took the evidence of the defendant's witnesses in order to ascertain whether the defence was a boni fide one. The evidence wholly failed to establish a prima facie case in support of the existence of any right of way, and the Magistrate, therefore, correctly held that he had jurisdiction to decide the case. It is quite possible that at the trial further evidence may be forthcoming in support of the defence, and if the Magistrate should then be satisfied that it is a boni fide defence, it will be competent for him to dismiss the action on the ground of want of jurisdiction. In dismissing the appeal the Court will remit the decision as to the costs of appeal to the Court below.

Hopley, J., concurred.

DE LANGE V. THERON. { 1904.
Nov. 19th.

Municipal regulations — Governor's approval—Ultra vires.

The Municipality of M. had enacted a certain bye-law, whereby the owner of any goat who should allow it to trespass on any private property should be liable to a certain fine. This bye-law had been approved by the Governor.

Held, that the Municipal Act gives no power to a Municipality to make any bye-law, whereby a private injury done by one individual to another is constituted a criminal offence.

Held further, that the Court has jurisdiction to enquire whether any bye-laws of Municipalities, even though approved by the Governor, are intra vires or not.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Mossel Bay. There was no appearance on behalf of the Mossel Bay Municipality, and the Attorney-General had intimated that he would not oppose the appeal. The circumstances of the case were that the appellant was charged before the Resident Magistrate of Mossel Bay in September with having contravened paragraph 2 of section 21 of the Mossel Bay Municipal Regulations, in that he unlawfully and wrongfully allowed certain goats to run at large on the property of Mr. C. W. Black. Exception was taken to this regulation, on the ground that it was ultra vires. It was contended in support of the exception that the Municipality had no power to make this regulation, inasmuch as the Act of 1892, giving power to the Municipality to frame regulations, provided that animals found trespassing should be impounded. It was further stated that the goats had been impounded when trespassing on the day previous to that on which the offence now in question was alleged to have taken place, and that the prosecutor had accepted trespass money in respect of that. He gave a receipt for the trespass money, in which he stated that he did not absolve the Municipality from the performance of their duties under the Municipal regulations. The Magistrate imposed a fine of £4. In his reasons for dismissing the exception, he stated that the bye-laws had received the sanction of the Governor.

Mr. Gardiner (for appellant) contended that the regulation under which the defendant was charged was ultra vires. He pointed out, further, that the Magistrate had convicted the defendant of trespass on four occasions, whereas he was only charged with trespass on one date. He submitted moreover, that Black had lost his right to take proceedings, by reason of his having, on a date subsequent to the trespass with which appellant was charged, accepted trespass money. Counsel asked for costs against the Municipality or Black.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate, in his reasons, says that the Municipal bye-laws and regulations have received His Excellency the Governor's approval, and that therefore they should be held to be valid. I do not blame the Magistrate for holding this view, but this Court has continually exercised the power to inquire whether any bye-laws or regulations of municipalities are within the powers of such municipalities to enforce or not. In the present case, the bye-law, the validity of which is disputed, is to the effect that the owner of any goat who shall allow the same to run at large on private property without the permission of the owner shall be liable, on conviction of such offence, to a penalty not exceeding five pounds sterling. I can find nothing in the Municipal Act of 1892 which justifies any municipality in making a bye-law by which a private injury done by one individual to another is constituted a criminal offence, and punishable with a fine. So far as this bye-law makes it an offence to allow cattle to stray on any public thoroughfare, it seems quite within the power of the Municipality, but it cannot be carried to the extent of applying it to trespass upon private property. The Attorney-General has received notice of this appeal by direction of the Court, so as to enable him to defend the validity of this bye-law, and he has not, on behalf of the Government, appeared to defend the validity of a bye-law which has received the sanction of the Governor. Neither the public nor the Municipality can be affected by trespass on private property, for which ample redress is provided for by law, and I am clearly of opinion that this Council had no power to constitute such a trespass a penal offence. The appellant has also asked for costs against the Municipality. It is clear that the Municipality are not parties to this suit, and although notice was given to the Municipality that costs would be applied for against them, the Court cannot give judgment for costs against them. Then as to Black, the complainant, it is true made the complaint, but according to the record, it would appear that the prosecution was a public one. Black simply finds a regulation in existence, and he makes complaint that this regulation has been infringed. I do not think the Court would be justified, then, in holding that Black is to be liable for any portion of the costs. The appeal must be allowed, and the conviction quashed, but there will be no order as to costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller; Respondent's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

{Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr Justice HOPLEY.]

Es parte FREMANTLE. $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} 1904. \\ \text{Nov. 21st.} \\ \text{" 22nd.} \\ \text{" 23rd.} \\ \text{Dec. 12th.} \end{array} \right.$

Election petition—Sub-agent—
Bribery — Personation — Treating—Paying travelling fares.

This was an election petition, presented on behalf of H. E. S. Fremantle, praying that the election of T. W. Mills, as M.L.A. for Uitenhage, be declared null and void, on the ground of bribery, treating, and inducement to personation.

The petition is in the following terms:

The petition of Henry Earldley Stephen Fremantle, of Cape Town, humbly sheweth:

1. That your petitioner and Thomas William Mills were on the 20th of June, 1904, duly nominated as candidates for membership of the House of Assembly of this Colony for the electoral division of Uitenhage.

2 That thereafter a poll was demanded and taken throughout the said division on the 12th of July, 1904.

3. That on the 14th of July, 1904, the Returning Officer of the said division declared the state of the poll to be as follows:

Thomas William Mills	1,086 votes
Henry Earldley Stephen Fremantle (your petitioner)	1,069 votes

4. That on the 19th of July, 1904, the said result of the election was proclaimed in the "Government Gazette."

5. That the return and election of the said Mills was undue by reason of corrupt and illegal practices in the following respects:

(a) The said Mills, by himself or his agents, or by other persons on his behalf, with the knowledge, consent, or approval of himself or his agents, gave or agreed to give, or offered, promised, or promised to procure, or endeavour to procure money or valuable consideration, to or for certain voters in order to induce such voters to vote or refrain from voting at the said election, and did, so far as certain of the said voters are concerned, corruptly give or procure such money or valuable consideration on account of such voters having voted or refrained from voting at such election.

Your petitioner annexes hereto a schedule marked "A," giving particulars of certain of the acts of bribery herein referred to.

(b) The said Mills, by himself or his agents, or by other persons on his behalf with the knowledge, consent, or approval of himself or of his agents, gave or promised or caused to be given or provided, or was accessory to the giving or providing certain drink and refreshments to or for certain persons, for the purpose of corruptly influencing such persons or other persons to give or refrain from giving their votes at such election, or on account of such persons having voted or refrained from voting at such election.

Your petitioner annexes hereto a schedule marked "B," giving particulars of certain of the acts of treating herein referred to.

(c) The said Mills, by himself or his agents or by other persons on his behalf, with the knowledge, consent, or approval of himself or of his agents, gave or agreed to give, or offered and promised to procure or to endeavour to procure money or valuable consideration to or for certain persons in order to induce such persons to commit the offence of personation, and to vote for the said Mills at the said election, and did aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission by certain persons of the said offence by personation.

Your petitioner annexes hereto a schedule marked "C," giving particulars of certain of the wrongful acts referred to:

(d) The said Mills, by himself or his agents, or by other persons on his behalf with the knowledge, consent or approval of himself or of his agents, paid or contracted to pay certain persons in connection with and either before, at, or during the said election, on account of the conveyance of electors to and from the poll for railway or other fares.

Your petitioner annexes hereto a schedule marked "D," giving particulars of certain of the illegal practices referred to:

Wherefore your petitioner prays that it may please your lordships to declare the election of the said Mills null and void, and that your petitioner may have the costs of this petition, or that your lordships will make such further or other order as to your lordships may seem meet.

The usual verifying affidavit was annexed.

SCHEDULE A.

1. James Glannan, a voter registered as No. 708 and a sub-agent of the said Mills, on or about the 11th of July aforesaid, and at the Masonic Hotel, Port Elizabeth, gave one George James Bubb, a voter registered as No. 260, the sum of 10s. 6d. in order to induce the said Bubb to vote for the said Mills and to refrain from voting for the petitioner.

2. The said Glannan on or about the day of the said election, and at Port Elizabeth, gave one Thomas Graham, a voter registered as No. 734, the sum of 10s. 6d. in order to induce the said Graham to vote for the said Mills and to refrain from voting for the petitioner.

3. The said Glannan, on or about the 8th of July aforesaid, and at the said hotel, corruptly promised one John Henry Edwards, a voter registered as No. 551, money or other valuable consideration for the purpose of inducing him to vote for the said Mills.

SCHEDULE B.

The said Glannan shortly before the election, and at the Masonic Hotel aforesaid, corruptly provided or caused to be given or provided or was accessory to the giving or providing certain persons, amongst them being the said John Henry Edwards, David Halley, a voter registered as No. 764; Alfred Smith, a voter registered as No. 1,680; William Oliver Cheney (or Chexey), a voter registered as No. 333; and Reuben Wahl (or Wall), a voter registered as No. 2,027, with drink free of cost for the purpose of inducing the said voters to vote for the said Mills, and to refrain from voting for the petitioner.

SCHEDULE C.

1. The said Glannan shortly before the election, and at the Masonic Hotel aforesaid, gave one Charles C. Boyd, of Port Elizabeth, who was not registered as a voter for the said division, money or other valuable consideration in order to induce him, and did corruptly counsel him, to personate Thomas Stockdale, a voter registered as No. 1,752, and to vote for the said Mills.

2. The said Glannan, on or about the 11th of July aforesaid, and at the said hotel, promised one Sydney Hallstead, who was not registered as a voter for the said division, money or other valuable consideration in order to induce him, and did corruptly counsel him to personate one Clement Bauer, a voter registered as No. 118, and to vote for the said Mills.

3. The said Glannan, on or about the 8th of July aforesaid, and at the said hotel, corruptly counselled the said John Henry Edwards to personate Hugh Donnelly, a voter registered as No. 506, and also to personate the said Clement Bauer and to vote for the said Mills in the name of one or other of the said persons.

4. The said Glannan, by himself or by one Fletcher, with the knowledge, consent or approval of the said Glannan, shortly before the said election and at the said hotel, gave one Gray the sum of 10s. in order to induce him to personate and did corruptly counsel him to personate one Richard Currie, a voter registered as No. 423, and to vote for the said Mills in the name of the said Currie.

SCHEDULE D.

1. The said Glannan, shortly before the said election and at the Masonic Hotel aforesaid, paid the said George James Bubb, referred to in Schedule A, the sum of 2s. 3d. for the conveyance of the said Bubb by railway to and from the poll for the purpose of recording his vote for the said Mills.

2. The said Glannan, shortly before the election and at the said hotel, offered, promised and contracted to pay the said John Henry Edwards and the said Thomas Graham, above referred to, their railway fares for the purpose of being conveyed to and from the poll and of voting for the said Mills.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for petitioner; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Bisset) for the respondent.

Mr. Burton, in opening the case, said that as to the formal allegations the parties had agreed upon certain admissions. The respondent agreed to admit allegations 1, 2, and 3 of the petition, and also specially admitted the appointment of James Glannan as his sub-agent, and that James Glannan acted as such. In regard to Schedule B counsel did not propose to press the portion relating to Reuben Wahl. The subpoena to the witness Boyd had not reached him, and it would, therefore, be impossible to proceed in relation to Schedule C (paragraph 4). Counsel said that, owing to the non-arrival of the mail steamer from the coast, several of his witnesses had not yet appeared, and it would not, therefore, be possible to take the case in proper order. Briefly, the petition alleged that Glannan, shortly before the election, was staying at the Masonic Hotel, Port Elizabeth, and he seemed to have visited various people, and to have sent messages to others to come and see him at the Masonic Hotel. There were different charges of bribery, treating and inducing to personation, and illegal practices.

John Frederick de Wet, Assistant Resident Magistrate of Uitenhage, who was the returning officer at the election, produced the original documents of the election of Mr. Mills. He said that Dr. Vanes (as agent of Mr. Mills) communicated to witness the fact that Glannan had been appointed sub-agent. Witness presented the summary of the successful candidate's return of the election expenses. The amount was £107 19s. 6d., the principal items being £50 share of returning officer's expenses, £50 3s. 2d. printing, advertising, and stationery, £3 5s. postages and telegrams. Payments to sub-agents were returned as nil.

L. Tennant Thomas, clerk at the Colonial Office, said he was in charge of the marked copies of the voters' list. He produced a certified copy. He found that Bubb was marked as having voted in the Field-cornetcy No. 1, Uitenhage. Thomas Graham was marked as having voted in the same Field-cornetcy; John Henry Edwards was shown as having voted there. The original papers would show at what polling stations these persons had voted. The returns also showed the following as having voted: David Halley in Field-cornetcy No. 1; also Alfred Smith in the same, and William Olivier Cheney or Chexey. Hugh Donnelly had not been marked as having voted, nor had Clement Bauer. Witness would produce later on the original marked copies of the votes recorded.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The list had been prepared in the Colonial Office, and was certified.

George James Bubb, of Port Elizabeth, a riveter, said that he had been employed by the Harbour Board, for 16 months. He had previously lived at Uitenhage, and had been registered there as a voter (No. 260). He was described upon the list as a farmer; he was employed in a workshop. He met Glannan at Port Elizabeth about the time of the last election; Glannan came to him at the Jetty on the Friday (July 8) preceding the polling day. Glannan was accompanied by Polson, who used to have a bar at Uitenhage. Glannan said that he had seen Mills about him, and that he (witness) must come down to the Masonic Hotel that night. Witness did not go down, and on the following day, Jack Price, a workman at the Jetty, brought witness a message. Witness, in consequence, went to the Masonic Hotel on the night before the poll. He saw Glannan and Dave Halley. Glannan asked him if he was coming up on the following day. Glannan said that Mills would pay his wages (10s. 6d.) and train fare (2s. 6d.), and he handed over a sovereign and some silver to Jack Price. Half was to be given to witness. Witness received from Price 12s. 9d.; the money was paid at the next bar.

[Hopley, J.: What made you think that Glannan gave the money to go and vote at Uitenhage?]

Glannan said he would pay us to go and vote. Glannan did not mention the election to him. Glannan was not present when Price handed over the sum of 12s. 9d. to witness. Witness went to Uitenhage and voted. He received permission at the works to go and vote; he lost his day's pay at the Harbour Board.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He saw Glannan give money to Price on the Monday night; he did not hear what passed between them. He did not know whether there was a half-sovereign amongst the money paid by Glannan; he did not know the exact amount that was received by Price. Witness did not know, as a matter of fact, that he was to receive half the money. Price did not ask witness at the other bar if he was going up to Uitenhage; he asked him on the way down to the Masonic Hotel. Witness told Price he was not going to lose a day's pay. He had had three glasses of beer with Price. He was not "over the sober line" when the money was paid over at the bar lower down than the Masonic. When witness saw Glannan, the latter asked him if he was going to vote on the following day; Price was not present. Nothing was said about the election.

By the Court: The word "election" was not used in the conversation.

Thomas Graham, of Aberdeen, a baker, said that during the Uitenhage election he was engaged at the Victoria Bakery, Port Elizabeth. He had previously lived at Uitenhage. He was registered as a voter at Uitenhage. About the time of the Uitenhage election he was visited by one Polson, who was then working at a bar. He promised Polson that he would go and see Glannan on the following day, the Saturday before the election. Polson had a voting card, which he left with witness. Witness did not see Glannan until the Monday morning, but he had no interview at that time. On the day of the election he saw Glannan about 8.15 a.m., in the Masonic Hotel.

Glannan asked him if he was going to vote, and whether he would be voting for Mills. Witness said "Certainly; what do you think?" Witness wanted to know what about his expenses. Glannan told him it would be all right about his expenses. Witness said he wanted his expenses before he asked leave at his work in the afternoon. Glannan took him to one side, and gave him 10s. 6d. Glannan afterwards gave him another shilling. Witness went by the train in the afternoon, and voted at Redhouse. A few days after the election he saw Glannan coming down from Uitenhage to Port Elizabeth. Glannan asked him what he thought about Edwards, and said that the latter had given him (Glannan) away. Still later, he saw Glannan at the Vine Hotel; Glannan asked him if it were true that he had made an affidavit. Witness said "Yes." Glannan told him that he would not make anything by that. Witness replied that he could not lose anything, as he had nothing to lose.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness had been a barman. He had been prosecuted for receiving money in the bakehouse at night. He had handed the money to a certain gentleman. He got the money, and paid it over, and the prosecution dropped. He saw one Fletcher, and made certain statements in regard to this matter. The document (produced) correctly set out his statements. Witness did not know at that time that there would be a case.

Mr. Upington (reading from the document): "He (Glannan) did not give me any drink or money, neither did he promise me any." Is that true?—Witness: It is not true.

Why did you tell him what was false?—Because I was not on oath, and I knew the man I was talking with. I reckoned Fletcher had a confounded cheek to stop me in the street and ask me about my business.

"I did not see him give money or drink to anyone else, nor did I hear of anyone receiving money or drink?"—I said that to him.

Is that also a lie?—Yes, certainly.

[Maasdorp, J.: Did you see him give money to any one else?]

No.

Mr. Upington (again reading): "Nor have I heard of any one receiving money or drink?"—Witness: That is a lie.

In answer to another question, witness, referring to the document, said: I tell you it is a parcel of lies from beginning to end what I told him.

Mr. Upington: Now, why did you tell this parcel of lies from the beginning to end when you did not know there was going to be any case like this?—Witness: Because I know the man I was dealing with, and he had no authority to stop me in the street and ask me about my business.

By way of vindicating your honour you went there and told this parcel of lies?—I did not know what he was going to quiz me about when I went in the office. I saw that he had brought me in for his own convenience.

Witness was now living in Cape Town at Annandale Hall. He had stayed until a few days ago at the Aberdeen Hotel. He got into trouble on the day after the election because he took a day's holiday with the money he had received for voting. He was dismissed from his employment. He obtained other employment. He cheerfully accepted 10s. 6d. from Glannan, but he told Hallie and the others that he got nothing. Mr. Hofmeyer took him to sign the affidavit.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: Halley and Cheney were disputing about one man having got more than another. Halley said: "Don't vote until you get 'seventeen bob' from Glannan." He got into trouble because he took a holiday to spend the money he received to vote.

Maasdorp, J.: On the day of the election he got a full day's pay. He gave them to understand that he would not vote unless he was paid for it. He considered it the proper thing not to vote unless he was paid for it.

John Henry Edwards, a registered voter at Uitenhage, who at the time of the election was living at Port Elizabeth, where he was unable to obtain work, stated that prior to the election he had known Glannan for about six years. About the time of the election he met Glannan at the Masonic Hotel, Port Elizabeth. When he went home to his lodgings he found the following note: "Jack Edwards—Come and see me at Masonic Hotel, inquire for me," signed "Jimmy Glannan." At the Masonic Hotel, Glannan asked him what he would have to drink, and witness had a gin and bitters at his expense. There were several others in the bar at the time whom he recognised. Glannan, he believed, paid for four drinks. Cheney, to his mind, came to the hotel for the same purpose as witness. Glannan began talking about the election, and witness said he was not in a position to go to vote, when the former said, "I'll fix that all right." During the conversation Glannan gave him a card with an X opposite the name of Mills. Glannan said he had a lot of cases to hunt up at Port Elizabeth. Witness, in reply, said that one of the men named Graham was working at South End. Glannan then said, "There will be a lot of these fellows missing," and asked witness if he knew if any of them could be found to vote. Witness said he would go and see, and then Glannan showed him a card with Clement Bauer's name, and said, "There is one here you might vote on at Red-house." Witness said he would not like to do that, and when Glannan produced Hugh Donnelly's card, and asked him to vote on it, witness said, "I am too well-known to do that." Witness advised him to drop the business as he would get into trouble. Hugh Donnelly had gone away on tramp from Port Elizabeth. Glannan went away to speak to some one for a few minutes, and then returned, saying, "Let's have another drink," for which he paid. Subsequently, he said we must get these fellows up somewhere, and added, "I have sent a dozen dummies away to Van Staadens." When witness said he had no money, Glannan said he would fix it up when he saw Mills or his partner. Witness kept his appointment on Monday night at the Mañonic Hotel, and Glannan, in an intoxicated condition, came into the billiard-room. Glannan sent for drink for witness and his friend, Hallstead, and when witness asked for a shandy, Glannan called for a large bottle of champagne. The champagne did not arrive, as one of the waiters took Glannan out. On the day of the election he went down to Uitenhage, and at the station he met two men named Paulsen and Rowe. The former bought witness's ticket, and got into the same compartment.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He had been employed on behalf of Mr. Fremantle to work up the case. Witness was asked, would he try and find out the others on the Sunday after the election. Prior to leaving England two years ago, he was secretary to a branch of the United Kingdom Coach-Builders' Society. He had remitted money to the society, because they charged him with being short of some money. After some time in this country he went into the workshop of the Port Elizabeth Tramway Co., and after being dismissed he was employed as a conductor, and was again dismissed for issuing a wrong ticket. He picked up a used ticket, and handed it to a man, who was set to trap him. That was on the 22nd April, 1904. He denied that previously he had systematically issued wrong tickets. Between the time of his dismissal and the election he was very hard up. To a great extent he was to work up the case for the love of the thing. He refused on the election day to make an affidavit for Professor Fremantle, and the Rev. Mr. Pienaar. On the Saturday after the election he was approached by Messrs. Schoeman, Van Rensberg, and Bulb, when one of them said: "You won't get into any trouble and you will be well looked after." They said, "We'll protect you," and Mr. Schoeman made some remarks about a passage Home, but he could not say that there was any offer of a little money on the voyage. He was to get any expenses increased through obtaining evidence. Witness had no authority to tell others that they would have passages Home, and a little money on the voyage. Hallstead was present when he made that statement to Halley. Witness told Moses that if he gave any information he would have a trip to Cape Town, and his expenses paid during the trial. Halley was told that he would get a passage Home, or a ticket to Johannesburg, and the probability of a job if he gave information. At the hotel witness introduced Halley to Schoeman, and the latter engaged Halley in conversation. Witness did not hear Schoeman say to Halley "You will have a free passage Home, and expenses if you give the information." Mr. Schoeman said to Halley: "If you don't give the information you will be subpoenaed, and then you will get nothing at all." Witness left Schoeman and Halley dining at the hotel, and subsequently received instructions to see Halley off by the night train to sign an affidavit at Mr. Schoeman's office. Witness asked Cheney to go to the Golden Fleece Hotel for the purpose of making an affidavit, but he did not think he made Cheney any offer. He did not remember an offer being made to Cheney when the offer was made to Halley. Witness told all sorts of lies to fellows that were hunting after him, and he might have said anything to Anderson. He knew John Steel, of Port Elizabeth. He remembered meeting Steel and another man, named Hallstead, in Port Elizabeth, on the morning of the election. He denied having boasted to Steel that he was going to make money out of the election. Witness could not say whether he now had the letter he received from Schumann through Hallstead. He did not remember having told Steel that the Bond had promised him a free passage to England, and also his board until he left. He would not deny that he had said so; he was not sure about it.

[Hopley, J.: Was there any foundation for that?]

Witness (hesitatingly): No, I don't think so.

[Hopley, J.: Don't say you don't think so. You must know?]

Well, the man whom I said before used those words, I don't think he had the authority to carry the things out.

[Hopley, J.: Who was the man?]

Schumann once said so. He said, "Oh, wouldn't you like a free passage to England?" I said, "Well, I don't know." He did not say anything about board then.

[Hopley, J.: At another time?]

Yes. But the board was for what I was doing in lieu of work.

Further cross-examined: He had not tried to persuade Reginald Moses to say that the money Fletcher was spending was for election purposes. He was never present with Moses and Schumann at the Fountain Hotel; he was at the Falcon with them. Steel came in afterwards. It was false to say that witness tried to "school" Moses into what he was to say. He tried to get Steel to give evidence. Witness was paid his expenses, because of the wages he had lost through going to vote. He was paid his expenses by Mr. Wynne, of Wynne's Hotel. The money was paid to him for going to vote; he was not ashamed of receiving the money, because he had lost the time. At the time of the election of Vanes and Lee, he was working at Van Staaden's Pass as a carpenter. He knew Wm. Sadler Metcalfe; witness did not ask him on the day of the election if there was any money knocking about. Witness asked him for the price of a dinner or tea, as he had no money. He told Metcalfe that he had lost two days through coming in to vote. He would not swear that he did not say, "I have voted for the Progressives, and have got — all." He did not remember; it was so long ago. He did not go to Mr. Adcock, Lee's agent, and ask him for money. He had been told that he would be paid his two days' wages. He did not remember having said that he had lost two days' wages through going to vote for the Progressives, and that he would make it hot for them. He did not think that he had said in Port Elizabeth that he wished there was an election every day. He had not said that he had been paid £1 by Mr. Fremantle's agent to go and vote. He received no money from the agent to go and vote. He used to tell people any mortal thing they wanted to believe. Glannan, whom he met in a Port Elizabeth bar, asked him to personate five or six people. Witness received a card from Glannan in the presence of Halley and Cheney. He was only to personate one voter.

Mr. Upington: Was it upon your information that certain persons were prosecuted for personation in connection with this election?—Witness: I dare say.

Can you explain to me why Glannan was not prosecuted for procuring these personators? No.

Do you know that these men have been acquitted?—I only heard it the other day — that one case was withdrawn.

Cross-examination continued: He was not to get anything for personation; he refused to do the work. He told Glannan that he would not do it, and that he was too well known to try it. He was prepared to have taken his expenses to go and vote, say, his wages and railway fare. He was out of work at the time. His wages at the Bay had been 14s. a day. He expected to be paid when he did work.

Mr. Upington: And so you expect to be paid for working up this case?—Witness: Well, I don't know about that.

Further cross-examined: He did not tell anybody whom he voted for. He did not promise to vote for any particular person. He met Mr. Fremantle, and wished him luck. He sympathised with Mr. Fremantle a little, because of the attacks made upon him, and the scandalous way they had treated him in Uitenhage.

He was promised a passage Home for helping to get up this case. He told them that he must have some protection, and that he would not be safe in Port Elizabeth if he was going to give all this away, and that he might just as well clear. He did not intend to go Home, as a matter of fact. His idea was that, through helping them, he might have a chance of a job somewhere, and of keeping himself. Witness got Graham to go up to Aberdeen and vote, and he advanced his expenses from money the witness had borrowed from Mr. Wilkie, a clerk in Mr. Moore's employ. The money was not a loan. Witness received communications from the Fremantle party through Mr. Schumann. Graham was taken to Aberdeen out of the way of further corruption.

Witness received no pay for doing that. Graham worked at Aberdeen as a baker for two days; he remained at Aberdeen about five or six weeks. Mr. Moore paid something for witness at the first. Witness worked most of the time. Hallstead was also staying at the Aberdeen Hotel; he had stayed there from September until he had come down here. Witness's board money in Port Elizabeth came down from Mr. Schumann; the same party paid his railway fare to Aberdeen and also Hallstead's.

Re-examined: On the polling day, witness told Mr. Fremantle that a lot of poor men were going to get into trouble; there were wrong practices going on. Witness had heard of one man who was convicted of personation; his name was Lamb. Others disappeared, and witness got Graham and Hallstead away to protect them from a similar fate. Boyd made an affidavit one Saturday, and then he disappeared on the following Wednesday.

[Hopley, J.: Do you suggest foul play?]

Yes, I suggest it, because I know he was not in a position to disappear; that's my reason.

The witness Thomas (recalled) produced the original marked copies of the voters' lists in the election in question.

Sidney Hallstead, lately of Aberdeen, said that at the last election at Uitenhage he was in Port Elizabeth, and was out of employment. He had been a signal fitter in the C.G.R. He met Glannan on the 11th July in the billiard-room of the Masonic Hotel, Port Elizabeth; he was introduced by Edwards. During conversation witness was asked by Glannan to have a drink. Witness said he would have a glass of beer. Glannan asked him if he would vote for the Progresssives at Uitenhage. Witness said he had no vote at all. Glannan said, "We can fix that up all right." Then the beer came in, and Glannan again started the conversation about the election, and gave witness a card (produced). He said witness could vote in that name (Clement Bauer), as he (witness) was a mechanic as well. Witness did not examine the card. He afterwards showed it to Edwards, who was lodging at the same place. Subsequently, he handed the card to Mr. Fremantle. Glannan told him that he would pay his expenses to Uitenhage. After that, Glannan called for a bottle of champagne, which did not come in, because somebody took Glannan to bed. Witness did not vote at Uitenhage. He handed the card to Mr. Fremantle in Uitenhage on the Saturday after the election; his expenses to Uitenhage were paid by Bubb.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He was not promised a free passage Home if he made the affidavit, by Mr. Fremantle's supporters. They promised to try to get him a situation, and do their best for him. Mr. Schumann, Mr. Bubb, and Mr. Edwards were with witness when he went up to Uitenhage. He had certain drinks. He was afterwards sent to Aberdeen by Mr. Hofmeyr; he left on the 18th August, and had stayed there until he came down to Cape Town. He had worked part of the time at Aberdeen; Mr. Moore had paid his expenses at the hotel when he had not been working. Mr. Moore advanced his expenses; witness would have to repay the money. He did know how much he now owed Moore. He did not expect to receive anything for making the affidavits. He was fairly hard up about the time of the Uitenhage election. Because others had been paid to go and vote, he was not surprised to be introduced to Glannan with a view to personation. Witness did not exactly want to get money, but if Glannan had offered him money he would have taken it. Glannan, when he handed him Bauer's card, said: "There's a card, you can vote on that."

Craddock Parkin, of Uitenhage, said he was a member of the well-known Port Elizabeth family; he was a J.P. and also Mayor of Uitenhage. He knew Glannan, who had been a Town Councillor a little over twelve months. On the day before the election, witness was in Mr. Adcock's shop at Uitenhage. Mr. Roberts was present. Mr. Glannan came in, and in speaking about the election, he opened a purse and showed several banknotes and some gold. He remarked: "This is what I have got to do with for the election." Adcock said: "Be careful. Mr. Glannan; you have to deal with the Beck Act." Glannan answered: "Oh. I have seen more elections than you or your grandfather, and I can ride through the Beck Act with a carriage and four horses." Glannan said he was going to Port Elizabeth to get up voters. This occurred about 9.30 a.m. Witness was and always had been a Progressive in politics, and an open advocate of the party. All the men present when the conversation took place were Progressives. Witness did not know anything about coming to give evidence until Thursday last, when he was notified that he would be subpoenaed. As far as witness knew, Glannan was not a man of means; he was employed as Clerk of Works in the town. He seemed to have no permanent occupation. Witness was very sorry he had had to come to the court and give evidence. He should say that there was £10 in gold in Glannan's purse, besides notes.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness was told that Glannan's wife had some means. He was not aware that Glannan had been curator bonis of Mrs. Crook's estate. Witness was very, very sorry to be away from home now, because they had a Town Council election coming on on Wednesday; there would be a keen contest, and he was one of the candidates. He did not remember a bet being made in Adcock's shop on the 11th July.

Wm. Robert Adcock, tailor, Uitenhage, also gave evidence as to the incident in his shop on the day before the election. He said that Glannan, though not drunk, seemed to be under the influence of drink. Glannan showed one or two £5 notes and some gold. Witness cautioned him about the money, and said: "Be careful of the Beck Act." Glannan said he could drive a coach and four through the Beck Act.

[Hopley, J.: What was it that connected the money with the Beck Act in your mind?]

Knowing that he was an election agent. In further evidence, witness said that Glannan and he was going to Port Elizabeth. Witness had always been a Progressive.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Glannan was very jovial, and he seemed to be confident of Mr. Mills's success. Witness did not say he thought Mr. Fremantle would be elected; he was sure Mills would get in. He did not remember a bet being mentioned. He would not say that no bet was made. Witness was agent for Mr. Lee at the previous election. John Henry Edwards was brought to him at that election, and he asked for his expenses from Van Staaden's Dorp. There was no necessity for Edwards to have come to Uitenhage and vote; he could have voted at Gedult River. Witness refused to give him any money, whereupon Edwards used some very abusive language. He said he had risked losing his situation to come and vote Progressive, that the Progressives had never done anything for him, and that he would make them pay for it at the next election. Edwards wanted £1 12s. 6d. Witness attached very little importance to the conversation in his shop.

Re-examined: His advice to Glannan was not intended to warn him about betting. It was on account of the money that he told Glannan to be careful about the Beck Act.

Henry Chase, attorney, Uitenhage, said that he had been engaged upon this case for the petitioner. He had as an attorney taken a statement by a man named Charles Boyd, either in Port Elizabeth or Uitenhage. Witness was a Justice of the Peace. The statement (produced) was made on the 23rd July, 1904. About a month ago witness heard that Boyd had disappeared; he meant by "disappeared" that he could not be found, and had gone. Another man named Alfred Smith had gone. Witness thought it was better that the other witnesses should leave Uitenhage. A subpoena was issued for Boyd. The Deputy-Sheriff of East London wired to say that Boyd was not to be found.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Cheney was brought to witness's house by Schoeman and Bubb. Cheney was not drunk; he was frequently in liquor, but was not on that occasion. The man came at 12 o'clock at night. Cheney may have had liquor given to him by witness. Cheney made a statement before he got the liquor. Witness could not say whether David Halley was taken to his house. Sometimes the men went to Schoeman's house. Absolutely no inducement was held out to Cheney at witness's house to make a statement. As far as witness knew, Cheney was not told that he would be looked after if he made a statement. He only heard a few days ago that Edwards and the other men had been removed to Aberdeen. He did not know who had made the arrangement or had paid the men's board. He had paid one of the men £1 for procuring information as to the whereabouts of people. He did not know whether the man was Edwards. The object was to find information as to the whereabouts of two or three people who were wanted to make statements.

S. Alexander Hofmeyr, attorney, Cradock, spoke to going to Uitenhage and finding the position in which the witnesses were placed. He advised Mr. Fremantle to send the men away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness paid for the men's keep; he was Mr. Fremantle's attorney. He had paid altogether £29 on account of Edwards and Hallstead; he had given 5s. to Graham. He paid the men's expenses, and he gave them something to keep them going. The money was not given to the men to provide them with whisky and smokes. The men had no money. Witness did not expect to get the money back again. He understood that Edwards was busy-ing himself to fish out evidence for the case. Witness gathered that Edwards was being paid his expenses. He gave Edwards a few shillings now and again.

By the Court: He felt that the witnesses were placed in a very difficult and trying position by being left in Uitenhage.

[Hopley, J.: You did not trust their moral character sufficiently to leave them in Uitenhage?]

I thought the temptation might be too great, and they might succumb to it.

Mr. Upington admitted certain handwriting upon cards and notes as Glannan's, and

Mr. Burton then closed his case.

James Glannan, the sub-agent of Mr. Mills, M.L.A., was called for the respondent. Witness said he was employed as a clerk of works. His wife had means, their income being about £320 a year. His wife had property at Port Elizabeth. On the 8th July he went to Port Elizabeth to collect rents. He was curator bonis in the estate of Catherine Elizabeth Crooks. He took blank election cards with him and also a few cards for people whom he knew. He had cards for Hugh Donnelly and Clement Bauer. On Friday evening he stayed at the Masonic Hotel, and attended a meeting of the "Buff" Lodge. He had sent a note to Edwards, who, it appeared, had been sleeping in the park for a few weeks. He left the note with Edwards's landlady. About 7.45 p.m., Edwards came to the Masonic Hotel, and in the billiard-room witness gave him a card for himself and one for Hugh Donnelly. Witness wanted to find out where Donnelly was. He did not intend that Edwards should personate Donnelly. Donnelly was well known at the Uitenhage shops. Both Edwards and Donnelly had been working at the tram depot in Port Elizabeth. Witness asked Edwards to hand the card to Donnelly. He also saw Cheney and Halley. He had not asked Boyd, Hallstead, or Edwards to personate any one. He did not see Hallstead on the evening in question. Witness was in the lodge room from shortly after 8 o'clock until 10.40 p.m. He remained at the Masonic all night, as he had not time to catch the train. He stayed in Port Elizabeth the following day, because he had not got his rents. Witness met Jack Price on the Saturday evening, and asked him for a loan. Mrs. Price lent him £2. Witness, Price, and Mrs. Price went into the bar and had a drink. He had not discussed the Uitenhage election; that election was dwarfed by the contest in Port Elizabeth. He did not see Edwards on the Saturday. On Sunday morning he returned to Uitenhage. He returned to Port Elizabeth on Monday morning. He called at Adcock's shop close upon 12 o'clock noon. He saw the sub-editor of the "Chronicle" in the shop of Geo. Smith, commonly called "Christo." In conversation, Smith said he thought Fremantle would head the poll. Witness pulled out his purse, and offered to lay Smith £5 on Mills' chances. Smith replied that he was not going to bet £5. Then somebody said, "Be careful, Jimmy, about the Beck Act." Witness, during further remarks, said, "I suppose it will be same as Dan O'Connell said—they will drive a carriage and four through it shortly." At the Masonic bar in the evening, Price came up to witness, and asked him for £2 money lent, which was promptly paid. Witness never spoke to Bubb, nor did the latter ever ask witness anything about expenses. Spittal was present when the money was paid over to Price. He never saw Graham on the morning of the election; he saw Cheney, who came to see him. Mr. Mills had never given witness a penny to spend, as his sub-agent.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He had had considerable experience of elections at Uitenhage, and had an intimate knowledge of the voters' list. He threw himself into the Progressive cause heart and soul, and spent only money on his own account. He would swear that any money he spent came out of his own pocket, but money he had spent was not altogether for the purposes of the election. When witness produced his own purse, full of money, he said, if it cost him all the money he had he would hunt up the boys in Port Elizabeth. Mr. Parkins's statement that he produced the purse with a view of spreading the money about for the election was incorrect. Witness did not say that he, like Dan O'Connell, would drive a coach and four through the Beck Act. The incident about producing the money was quite a surprise to him, and if George Smith was wired to he would readily contradict it. If witness had not to collect his rents he would not have gone to Port Elizabeth at all. He had not the slightest idea that Hugh Donnelly had gone away when he gave the card to Edwards. When he went to see Halley one of the men said he was "retrenched," and witness told Bubb to tell Halley to come and see him. He had no knowledge of Bubb's railway fare. All the men went up to vote at their own expense. Witness did not authorise anyone to spend money. In the case of Graham, his employer gave him leave off to vote, and he received no money from witness. Cheney and Smith were Buffaloes, but witness could not say whether Halley was accepted or not. He was just as elated over Mr. Brooks' election as that of Mr. Mills. Edwards never had a single drink for which witness paid. The reason he did not stand him a drink was because Edwards had tried to blackmail witness after Mr. Lee's election. He wrote a note to Edwards to come down, and see him, and the reason he did not stand him a drink was because he knew him to be treacherous. The only suggestion he could give of Hallstead having possession of Blauer's card was that Edwards had threatened to put the Progressive candidate out. The writing on the card with Clement Bauer's name was not his. Witness had not the slightest idea that Bauer had left Uitenhage for a long time. To the best of his ability he crossed off all the dead and missing from the registry list. The card must have been picked up at the polling booth. It was not correct that he said to Graham, "What do you think of Edwards?" When he met Graham he was aware that Edwards had made a statement. When witness heard of the trouble he sent Fletcher away to get a plain statement of facts from the witnesses, who were present in the hotel, and Graham made the statement voluntarily. When witness challenged Graham later on, witness said to him: "Tommy, watch it; you have made a correct statement, and I suppose they have filled you up with booze, and got you to make another." Alf. Smith's father paid his fare to London. Witness would finally swear he did not go down to Port Elizabeth specially on account of the election, and that he did not pay out a single penny to anyone.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: Certain cards were written out in the office and numbers of them were posted, and in that way some might find their way into the hands of unscrupulous persons. Witness produced the lease of his wife's property, which showed that the rent was due on the 7th. He did not go down to Port Elizabeth specially to hunt up the voters on that day.

By the Court: He usually kept £30 or £40 in the house, and he took the £10 from the drawer. He was prepared to spend every penny of the £10 to get up the voters from Port Elizabeth, as Mr. Mills had done him many a good turn.

Frederick Wm. Spittal, a clerk in the employ of Mr. Mills, said that on the night of the 11th July he saw Glanann at the Masonic Hotel about 6.20. He saw Glanann in the lobby. Glanann went away, and had tea, being absent 10 or 15 minutes. Glanann again came into the lobby. Witness spent the rest of the evening in his company. They intended to go to a meeting in the Feather Market Hall, but on account of the rain, they returned to the bar of the hotel. He saw Price in the course of the evening. Price touched Glannan on the shoulder. They went to one side, and Glannan gave Price some money. Witness did not hear what was said. Witness did not remember seeing Bubb at the hotel during the evening. He did not hear Glannan speak to Bubb; he never saw Bubb in company with Glannan that evening. Witness had some drinks with Glannan and a man named Morgan. He heard Glannan call for drinks; Glannan made some remark to the effect, "Buffs, fill them all up." Glannan had had a good deal to drink, and he went to bed early. On that night Glannan was never in the billiard-room between 6.20 and 8.15 to 8.30. Nothing was said about the Uitenhage election. If witness had thought Glannan was ordering drinks for that purpose he would have stopped him. The principal topic of conversation was the Macintosh election.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness had been a clerk in Mr. Mills's private business; Mr. Mills was a banker, or moneylender. Witness was in Port Elizabeth just before the Uitenhage election on private business of his own. He believed he saw Jack Edwards in the bar on the night in question, but he was not quite sure. Witness did not see Hallstead. Witness believed Bubb was in the bar on the night named; Halley and Cheney were present. He did not think that Glannan paid for more than one round of drinks. Witness remained in Mr. Mills's employ until the end of July. He was engaged temporarily. Witness had again been in his employ since the 1st November. In the interval he had applied to Mr. Fremantle for a billet. He was in Cape Town for nearly two months until he returned to Uitenhage about the beginning of November.

John Thomas Richard Price, an employe of the Port Elizabeth Harbour Board, said that he saw Glannan on Saturday evening, July 9. Glannan called him to one side, and asked him for a loan of £3. Witness's wife lent him £2. Witness and Glannan went to a bar; his wife did not enter the bar. By Monday evening, as arranged, he went to the Masonic Hotel for the return of loan of £2; this was between 7 and 8. He met Bubb on the way; Bubb said he was going to see Mr. Glannan by appointment. Witness met several friends, Halley, and others. On reaching the bar, he saw Glannan, who paid him back the £2. He did not remember seeing Spittal. He did not hear Glannan say anything to Bubb about going up to Uitenhage to vote. On leaving the hotel, he met Halley, Barraclough, and others. They called at the Criterion Hotel, and had several glasses of liquor. Bubb said he had no money with him, and that he wanted 10s 6d. for his day's pay, and his railway fare. Witness lent him 12s. 9d. Witness afterwards spoke to Glannan about the loan; the latter said he understood the money he had given him from Mr. Glannan. Witness expected to be paid back his 12s. 9d. by Bubb. Shortly after the loan to Bubb, witness demanded the return of the money. Witness had not been instructed by Glannan to pay the money to Bubb.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: His wages varied from £9 or £10 or £14. He had had a livery stable in Graham's Town, but he failed there. He was sued in the court for a small debt soon after the election, and he then pleaded poverty, and was ordered to pay the debt by small instalments. He did not observe Bubb in conversation with Glannan. He had not carried a message to Bubb from Glannan. He had never understood that of the money he received from Glannan he was to pay 12s. 9d. to Bubb. On the way to the hotel, Bubb told him he had an appointment with Mr. Glannan about the Uitenhage election. Mr. Hofmeyr, Mr. Bubb, and Mr. James Bubb called at his home subsequently, and tried to induce him to make a statement that was incorrect. He denied that he had told Hofmeyr that he received money from Glannan, and that he was to give 12s. 9d. to Bubb. If Mr. Hofmeyr said he did make such a statement, it was untrue. He afterwards saw Hofmeyr and others at the Criterion Hotel. Witness then told Hofmeyr that he would give his statement at the proper place. He had no idea whom Bubb would get the 12s. 9d. from. He had not said that Bubb told him that Glannan had promised him his day's expenses and railway fare. When witness spoke to Bubb on the works about the loan, the latter said he saw Glannan give the money to witness to hand to him. On the day of the election he went to Redhouse; he was not well in the morning. He simply went there as an afternoon's pleasure. He lost his pay on that day.

Ralph Beckett, a traveller, said he saw Glannan on the 8th July, about 8 p.m., at the Masonic Hotel. They were together at the lodge meeting of "Buffs" until 10.40 p.m.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was boarding at the hotel. He saw Glannan just before the lodge meeting. Glannan was drinking ginger ale at the lodge meeting.

John Frederick Hollings, an employe of the C.G.R., said he was Grand Registrar of the R.A.O.B. He took a note of the arrivals on the night of the 8th July. He remembered Glannan coming to the meeting in company with Beckett. Witness produced the register of attendances. They came about 8.40.

Thomas Abbott, coachsmith, stated on the night of the Assembly election he was in Wynne's Hotel, Port Elizabeth. Edwards came into the hotel that evening between 9.15 and 10 o'clock and asked witness to have a drink. Witness thought it funny that he should have money to buy a drink when he was out of work. Edwards said, "It doesn't matter, old man, I had a 'quid' from Fremantle's agent."

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He said he got the sovereign that morning. Witness never asked him about his vote. Anderson and one or two more were present on that occasion. Next morning witness's employer made a statement to him about corruption when witness said Edwards was not to be relied on, as he told a different tale the previous night.

Mr. Burton: I suppose you are a Progressive?

I don't know what I am.

He knew Edwards would twist any way.

Mr. Burton: Was he a friend of yours?

Witness: Well, if you call him a friend, I lent him money to take him over difficulties, and never got it back. He bore no malice to him for that. If he himself had been on the Uitenhage list he would have made a bit himself. He was anxious to see how Edwards got his money.

Albert Edward Anderson, auctioneer, stated that on the evening of the election he was also in Wynne's Hotel, where he saw Edwards and the last witness. Edwards asked them to have a drink, and witness, regarding him as a man who didn't pay, was rather surprised. When Edwards said he had been to Uitenhage, witness said, "You are a fool." Edwards said, "Never mind, I have had my fare up, a good feed, and a sovereign, and I am to get more from the Bond agent."

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was positive that Edwards mentioned a feed and a fare. He had no political sympathy. Edwards added, "As a matter of fact I am spending some of it now," and further, "I wish there was an election every day; I would never work." Witness was approached by a detective, who asked him what Edwards had said, and then to swear an affidavit.

By Hopley, J.: He had known Edwards for about eight months. Edwards gave witness a dummy ticket on the train. Edwards was regarded in Port Elizabeth as a "stiff."

[Hopley, J.: You knew the man to be a blackguard and a thief. It doesn't reflect much on your morality that you associated with him.]

I knew him through some friends.

Mr. Burton said that the first three charges in this petition were based upon the terms of Act 9 of 1883 (section 7), viz., as to bribery, treating, and personation. He submitted that if the facts which were relied upon in this matter were held proved by the Court they clearly fell within the words of the statute. The fourth charge of paying or contracting to pay for the conveyance of voters to the poll was based upon section 4 of the Act 26, 1902, commonly called the Beck Act. The Act made this a new offence. Before that Act was introduced the payment of a man's fare to go to the poll was not a corrupt practice, but it was now specifically made so by the Act of 1902. With regard to the consequence of the commission of corrupt practices at elections, that was specifically set forth in the course of this Act under section 13. So far as it affected the case, it showed that if, upon the trial of an election petition, it was proved that any corrupt or illegal practice had been committed by or with the knowledge and so on of the candidate or his election agent, such election would be void. Under section 17 the responsibilities of a sub-agent were defined. There was, in this case, no charge against the candidate himself personally, and there was no claim for the seat. The question was purely whether there had been such illegal and corrupt practices as to void the election. The charges were based entirely upon the alleged malpractices of the sub-agent Glannan. These charges were serious, seeing that, according to Glannan's own statement, the chief agent (Dr. Vane) was ill for some days, he himself, on his own admission, ran the election from that stage onwards, he was perhaps the most important man in connection with the conduct of the campaign by the Progressives. Glannan played a most important and prominent part. In dealing with a case of this kind they were compelled to have men who were not of irreproachable character. They could not expect to have angels of light. They must go into the byways and lanes to find men of that sort. He appealed to their lordships, who were really sitting there as a jury, to take a broad view of the whole case, and to say whether, upon the whole, taking the specific evidence given on the one side or the other, together with the probabilities and surrounding circumstances, their lordships were satisfied beyond reasonable or substantial doubt that these charges, or the greater portion of them, had been brought home to the respondent's sub-agent.

[Maasdorp, J.: You cannot take all the charges in a sort of hazy, cloudy manner. They must be dealt with clearly and distinctly. You cannot take the whole bulk and get some cumulative idea.]

Oh, no; I do not ask the Court to do that, but upon each specific charge I would ask the Court to bear in mind all the evidence in the case. He intended to briefly go over the outstanding features of the case. The main point of the defence was based upon Edwards's connection with the case in the first instance, and upon the fact that some of the petitioner's witnesses were removed to Aberdeen, where they had their expenses paid, and were looked after until they gave their evidence. He submitted that such an Act was not inconsistent with the practice adopted by the Crown for the protection of witnesses. He urged that the point should not be pressed home too strongly against the petitioner that the witnesses were removed by the petitioner, and their expenses paid pending the trial. As to Edwards, one appreciated that one had to meet the facts which Edwards himself had admitted as to his own character, and his past career and his connection with the case generally. It seemed that he was not a person of very high character. The circumstances surrounding his history did not redound to his credit, but there was this to be said for him, that he appeared on the whole to have been a very candid witness, he had made a fairly clean breast of it, and he had answered all the questions. It was upon his information, first of all, that the petitioner was moved to his inquiries. Counsel admitted that the statements made by Schoeman to Edwards as to a passage Home, and so on, were very unsatisfactory. Edwards was out of work at the time; he was what was popularly known as a "stiff." Was he a man who was likely to pay his own fare in order to go to Uitenhage to vote? Surely, the probabilities were in favour of the story of Edwards as against that of Glannan, who was adopting the very reprehensible practice of conducting an election from a public-house. Touching on the allegation that Glannan induced Edwards and Hallstead to personate voters, counsel said that the contest was extremely keen and close, and that Glannan was not the sort of man who would be over-scrupulous about seeing that all the votes that could possibly be recorded would be recorded. Dealing with the charges of treating, he contended that those allegations had been clearly established. In further remarks, counsel commented on the absence of certain men, who had gone away since the case was commenced, men whom it was alleged had been treated. If Edwards had stood alone, he could have understood that a case would be made out for the respondent; that was with the exception of the treating. But they had other evidence. They had the witness Graham, who said that he was paid his wages and fare to go and vote. In regard to the false statement made by Graham, counsel said he thought Graham, in his evidence, had been quite candid in reference to his reasons for the false statements he made to Fletcher. He had been very frank in regard to the money alleged to have been detained by him. Whatever imperfections Graham may have had, counsel submitted that Graham was a witness who appeared to be speaking the truth. Graham had been unshaken in his story of his relations with Glannan. Coming to the evidence of Bubb, Mr. Burton said that nothing had been shown against this witness's character, and it had not been shown that he had any association with Edwards. His story was not at all exaggerated.

[Maasdorp, J.: Bubb says he gave Price the money so that he should go to vote at Uitenhage, and "gave me half." How does he know that?]

I don't think that comes out specifically. It may have been in the talk between him and Price.

[Maasdorp, J.: He doesn't say Glannan or Price says so. He says: "He gave Price the money so that he could go and vote at Uitenhage, and gave me half."]

[Hopley, J.: Do you suggest Glannan spent his own money, or that of Mills?]

I don't suggest he spent his own. What I mean is that I am hardly bound to account for the source. I would hardly think he spent his own.

[Hopley, J.: If you ask the Court to hold that he was spending Mills's money, doesn't it involve finding Mills guilty of making a false return?]

It is not necessary to find that he was spending Mills's money. There are such things as political associations, and other sources. I don't for a moment wish to throw any discredit upon Mr. Mills. To think that Glannan had this money to scrape out of the drawer, and was going to spend it himself, was going a bit too far. It was very unlikely that he was going to spend his own money. On Parkin's evidence, the Court must come to the conclusion that the money was not accounted for in the return.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is there any limit to what a candidate may pay his agent?]

There is no limit to that, but it must appear. Under the circumstances, one is not bound to account for the way in which this money was got. Counsel then proceeded to refer to the section of the Act under which the case was brought, and pointed out that in England, for a single fare paid by respondent's agent, the respondent would be unseated. If one of the charges were proved, however trivial it might be, it would be sufficient. Bubb and Graham actually did get money for conveyance, and Edwards was promised. The sworn statements for the plaintiff stood out against practically Glannan's evidence alone. The incident in the shop was extremely important, and would be material in assisting the Court to decide the case. Mr. Parkin said on the day before the election the party of Progressives were present when Glannan pulled out a purse containing several £5 notes and gold, and said that he had that amount to put about for the election. Counsel did not know whether Glannan had driven a coach and four through the Beck Act, as he himself said, but there could be little doubt that he had tried. Parkin was clear that the money was produced for the purpose of the election. On the morning before the election, counsel took it as proved that Glannan exhibited the money for the purpose of distribution, and if that was clearly proved, the case was very simple. Whether it was his own money or not, it was an important contravention of the Beck Act. The Act provided that all payments should be made through the agent, in order that one could see what was spent. The return of Dr. Vanes would show that nothing had been spent by Glannan. Glannan admitted that he would spend every farthing to bring the boys up from Port Elizabeth. He declared that he did not spend a penny, but money legitimately spent could be accounted for. The Court could not possibly believe that Glannan went down to Port Elizabeth to specially collect the rent. If Glannan was prepared to pay the money, he could easily find the "stiffs" who must have been paid to vote. In conclusion, Mr. Burton quoted the Chief Justice in the case of Kyle v. Krige (9 C.T.R., 1), and submitted, from the evidence, the Court would hold that the contest was not fairly carried on by this agent, and if justice was to prevail, this petition must be held to be proved, and the respondent unseated.

Mr. Uppington for the respondent.

His learned friend closed his address with a quotation from the Chief Justice, and he (Mr. Uppington) would quote another, in the case of De Waal v. Sirencright (9 C.T.R., 12), held before five judges, in which the Chief Justice said: "The evidence in a case of bribery and corruption should be clear and conclusive. The consequences to a candidate of corrupt treating, even when he had no personal knowledge of it, are so serious that the Court should not hold it to be established except upon evidence which would warrant a jury in finding the charge proved." Counsel's suggestion was that this was a case, so far as the petitioner was concerned, tainted from its very inception. Means had been adopted to work up the case not wholly creditable to the persons concerned, and his learned friend would admit that, in the case of Schoeman and Bubb. He would urge that the Court was not justified as a jury to find for the petitioner on the evidence of such self-confessed liars as Edwards, Graham, and Hallstead. In such a case, the character of the witnesses was of the utmost importance, and he would ask the Court not to lose sight of the fact that a verdict adverse to the respondent in this case was practically finding Glannan guilty of various serious criminal offences, upon which serious results would follow. To ask counsel why he did not call Halley and Cheney, the principal witnesses for the plaintiff, was what he would certainly call audacious. Both Halley and Cheney were in court, and the latter had been subpoenaed by the petitioner. If the story told by Edwards and Hallstead was correct, why were these two men not called to corroborate the statement. The inference was that his learned friend could not get them to back up Edwards. Edwards, on his own confession, was such a rogue that no man could take his word, and therefore it was highly important to obtain corroboration. The fact that it was a difficult thing to prove a charge of bribery did not dispense with the necessity of doing it, and bringing adequate proof. His learned friend was asking the Court to perform almost the most important function it could, by unseating the choice of the people, and that should only be done on clear and specific proof on a clear and specific charge. Touching on Edwards's evidence, counsel said that it was common cause that Hugh Donnelly was the most unlikely man in Uitenhage to personate, and that Edwards, known as he was like a bad sixpence, was the most unlikely person to do it, and where was Edwards asked to do it? In a public bar! His learned friend talked a deal about the probability of the case. Well, was that charge probable in the case of a man like Glannan, who was experienced in elections. In regard to that, counsel urged that Glannan's story was to be believed. Where, in the case for petitioner, was the corroboration? The production of the card! To be in possession of a card after an election could not be argued as proof that it had been handed over to the person in possession. Who was Hallstead? A man who confessed he was open to receive a bribe, and at once he would go down as an unreliable person. In addition to that, he was living with Edwards in the same room. From three different points of view, the evidence came into court with a taint, and counsel said there must be strong corroboration before Glannan could be found guilty of such a serious charge. There was abeo-lutely no corroboration. Hallstead also gave evidence about treating, and it was interesting to test the value of his evidence. On the Monday night, he said Glannan offered him a drink, and that the latter insisted on champagne. There were two men playing billiards at the time, and neither of them were called. Was there any reason to suppose that Spittal came here to commit perjury, and he was either doing that, or telling the absolute truth. If Spittal's evidence was true, then Hallstead's story was simply a fabrication put into his head by Edwards. Glannan would appear to be a member of a somewhat jovial body, called the Buffs, and the Court would not forget, according to Spittal, that Glannan, on the verge of intoxication, said, "You are all Buffs. Fill 'em all up." Because Halley, Cheney, and, possibly, Edwards were there, and got the drinks, his learned friend would have them believe that Glannan was doing that for the purpose of votes. There was no evidence to show that he was standing liquor promiscuously to voters, and non-voters alike, to obtain Halley's and Cheney's votes. His learned friend, so far from calling Halley and Cheney, had the audacity to ask why he (Mr. Upington) had not called them. Upon the uncorroborated evidence of a self-confessed thief and liar, counsel submitted that the Court would not hold for the plaintiff. It was not sufficient to show that a sub-agent stood drinks; it was essential to prove that it was done for the purpose of influencing votes. If the theory of his learned friend would hold good, a candidate's life would not be worth living; he would have to be carried about in a glass case, and exhibited to his constituents. Counsel submitted the petitioner wholly failed to make out any case even to go to a jury. Cheney was hustled away at midnight, and brought to a Justice of the Peace, and counsel suggested the reason he was not called was that he would not support Hallstead and Edwards. With regard to the alleged promise to Edwards, when one considered his career, it would be unnecessary to deal further with that particular charge. It would be sufficient to say that no man would be safe if Edwards's evidence on a charge of bribery was to be believed. It was easily to see how Bubb possibly went up with a view of getting money from Glannan, and in a generous mood, while intoxicated, Price lent him his railway fare to go to Uitenhage. What really happened was that Bubb drew the inference from what he saw that part of the money Glannan paid to Price was intended for him. What earthly motive could Spittal have in committing perjury? His whole story showed that if he were here to bolster up a rotten case, he would have made it very much stronger. He would not have admitted the possible presence of Halley, Cheney, and Edwards. If it was a bribe by Glannan the money would have been paid over in the same bar. When Bubb made the statement to Price that he expected to receive money next day, it was impossible to say who he was to get it from. To use the words of Sir Jacob Barry, Bubb had exhibited the mind of a bribee, and his evidence was uncorroborated, and against him there was the evidence of Glannan, Price, and Spittal, who all three must be committed for perjury if Bubb was believed.

Mr. Upington said that most of the remarks that applied to Hallstead and Edwards also applied to Graham. Counsel specially directed the attention of the Court to the contradictory evidence now given by the witness Graham, in view of the statement that he had made before Fletcher. Graham said himself that that statement was a "parcel of lies"; yet at that time, according to his own statement, he did not know there was going to be a case. This statement was made on the 29th July. Then Graham was seen after that by the other side. Graham expected to get something out of it, just as Edwards did and Hallstead did. In addition, Graham was one of the noble trio who were sent to the segregation camp at Aberdeen. He actually did two days' work at Aberdeen. He was sent up in August to Aberdeen, and he remained there until this case came on. Counsel ridiculed the suggestion that the practice of sending witnesses away in this manner would be followed by the Crown. Graham had said that he was bribed by Glannan in the sight of Halley and Cheney. Yet they had had no corroboration given of this alleged bribery. Counsel submitted that Graham was a man who, on his own confession, could be corrupted, who could be bribed, on his own confession a liar and an inventive liar. There they had two most important elements. There was the temptation also of the man being out of work, and looking out for employment, looking out for future reward. Against this man they had the evidence of Mr. Glannan, against whose career there was not one breath of suspicion. He submitted it was idle to argue that Graham's story was plausible, that his story was probable, or to talk airily of the probabilities of the case, to bring a large number of charges, not one of which was satisfactorily proved, and to say, because there were many of them, because there was an air of suspicion about this, that, or the other thing, the Court must find this particular charge or the other particular charge proved. Why, counsel asked, was not Halley or Cheney called? That, he thought, disposed of the whole of the schedule. He would say, generally this, about the case, that if they were to talk of the probabilities of the case, if they were to talk of the surrounding circumstances, the far better test, whether there was a genuine case, whether the petitioner's complaint was a genuine one, would be to show how this information was obtained, and he said that this reckless going about, admitted by Edwards, offering and promising this, that, and the other consideration if information was forthcoming, and, in spite of that, not being able to obtain any information, was one of the strongest proofs that the charges now put forth were without foundation. If there was a fear that these men would be spirited away, or there was a fear that they might be corrupted, what weight was to be attached to their evidence? He said that these men had got every inducement to say that which was false, every one of them had admitted the possession of a morality which was open to be corrupted; Edwards had admitted to being a false-lying, thieving rascal; Graham had admitted to being a liar and a person open to be bribed; Hallstead had lived with a man whom one must assume that he knew, to use the words of Mr. Justice Hopley on Tuesday, to be "a blackguard and a thief," and one may assume that Hallstead had not been entirely uncorrupted and uncontaminated by contact. With regard to Bubb, he did not wish to describe Bubb more than was necessary. He would simply say that, in all probability, he was a weak sort of man, that he had been over-persuaded, and that, as a result of over-persuasion, he had come to believe that these things had happened. Counsel also dealt with the conversation in Adcock's shop on the day before the election, and again quoted from the Sivewright case. He submitted that the charges embodied in the petition had not been proved.

Mr. Burton briefly addressed the Court in reply. He again laid stress on the evidence given by the witnesses Parkyn and Adcock, and emphasised several of the features in the evidence of the petitioner's witnesses, and more particularly that of Bubb.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 12).

Maasdorp, J.: The petitioner and respondent were candidates at the election of members of the House of Assembly for the electoral division of Uitenhage in June last. The respondent was declared duly elected by 1,086 votes to 1,068. The petitioner has presented a petition complaining of the undue election of the respondent by means of bribery, treating, personation, and the illegal practice of paying fares for the conveyance of electors to and from the poll. In the general terms of the petition it is alleged that the corrupt and illegal practices were committed by the respondent himself or his agents, or others on his behalf with his knowledge, consent, and approval, but in the schedule of particulars the charges are narrowed down to acts of respondent's sub-agent Glannan, and no attempt was made at the trial to establish knowledge or approval of such acts on the part of Mills. In dealing with the evidence for the purpose of determining the issues between the parties no advantage will, to my mind, be gained in taking the charges in the order they appear in the petition. For the sake of clearness, I think they can be more conveniently dealt with by following up the evidence of the witnesses who are involved in, and give their testimony upon certain of the charges, falling under different heads. By so doing, the credibility of the witnesses can be better tested, and amid the direct conflict which exists in the evidence it will be found that the credibility of the witnesses is the point upon which the case will mainly turn. Under the charge of bribery, it is alleged that Glannan, as sub-agent of Mills, promised a voter named Edwards, money, or other valuable consideration, for the purpose of inducing him to vote for Mills. Glannan is charged with treating this man Edwards, amongst others, by giving him drink free of cost for a like inducement. Under personation it is said Glannan corruptly counselled Edwards to personate two voters called Donnelly and Bauer, and to vote for Mills in the name of one or other of them. And, lastly, Glannan is alleged to have promised Edwards his railway fare for the purpose of his being conveyed to the poll and voting for Mills. It appears from Edwards's evidence that in response to a note received from Glannan he visited the Masonic Hotel, in Port Elizabeth, on the 8th of July last. This was on a Friday, and the election took place at Uitenhage on Tuesday, the 12th. On arriving at the hotel, Glannan asked him what he was going to have, and stood drinks in the bar of the hotel to him, and three others, called Wall, Halley, and Cheney. Glannan then asked him if he was going to Uitenhage to vote, and upon his saying that he was not in a position to go, Glannan replied, "I will fix that all right." After discussing the election, and the desirability of finding the voters living at Port Elizabeth, Glannan took some voting cards out of his pocket, gave Edwards one for himself and another, bearing the name of Clement Bauer, and said, "There is one; you might vote at the Red House on that." Edwards said, "I do not know Clement Bauer, and they will very soon find me out at that game. I will not do it." Glannan then showed him a card bearing the name of Hugh Donnelly, and asked Edwards to take Hugh's place. Edwards refused, and did the same with respect to several other cards. Glannan then went out, and after a couple of minutes returned and paid for drinks to the same lot of fellows as before. After that Glannan took him a little apart from the others, and during their conversation Edwards said he had no money to go to Uitenhage. Glannan said, "I am going to Uitenhage, and will have to see Mills—or Mills' party—and I will fix you up." This conversation took place in the bar of the Masonic, where there were several other persons present who joined in part of the conversation, but much of it was addressed to Edwards, as he says "in a little aside." It will be seen that it was almost at the conclusion of the conversation that Glannan took Edwards a little apart from the others. In cross-examination, Edwards says, "Glannan wished me to personate Bauer or anyone of the five or six whose names were on the cards which he showed me. I got my card in the presence of Halley and Cheney. They probably heard what was going on. It was in something like a whisper that Glannan presented me with cards, and asked me to personate the people." The evidence of Edwards imputes to Glannan at this one meeting the offences of bribery, treating, personation, and illegal conveyance of voters. He then goes on to say that on Monday evening he and Halstead went to the Masonic Hotel, and in the billiard-room Glannan offered them drinks, but Glannan was taken out of the room by someone before they had the drinks. On Tuesday morning, Edwards says he went to Uitenhage by the 10.10 train, having been provided with a railway ticket by a man called Paulse. The evidence of Edwards with respect of the occurrences on the evening of Friday, the 8th, is not corroborated by any other witness. On the other hand, Glannan says that on that evening, at his request, Edwards came to the Masonic Hotel at 7.45, and he gave Edwards a voting card for himself and one for Donnelly, but that he never asked him to personate Donnelly or any other voter. He says he went into the bar of the Masonic Hotel with Beckett, a little after eight o'clock, but did not see Edwards there. From there they went to the Grand Lodge of Buffaloes, where they stayed till 10.40. Beckett states that he was with Glannan on the night of the 8th at the hotel from 6 to 11 o'clock, and from 8.30 they were at the Buffalo Lodge, which was held in the hotel, and the only drinking he mentions was when he stood Cheney and Glannan drinks. I may here mention two other witnesses with whom Edwards comes into conflict in his evidence. Abbott and Anderson say that on the night of the Uitenhage election they met Edwards between 9 and 10 o'clock at Wynne's Hotel, in Port Elizabeth, and in conversation, Abbott says Edwards told him "I had a quid from Fremantle's agent this morning." To Anderson he is said to have remarked, "I had a sovereign from the Bond agent, my fare and a good feed, and I am going to have some more money." This is denied by Edwards, who adds, however, "I told people all sorts of lies when I thought they were trying to get information from and spy upon me." This is the evidence bearing upon the following charges: Schedule A 3, Schedule B, Schedule C 3, and part of Schedule D 2, and upon this evidence, together with such light as can be derived from circumstances, we must determine these charges. In my opinion a certain degree of improbability attaches to Edwards's account of what took place at the Masonic Hotel on the 8th of July. It was certainly a stupid and dangerous thing for Glannan to resort to the illegal practices mentioned at the public bar of an hotel in the immediate presence of a number of other persons. Nevertheless the improbability is not so great but that it may be removed by the evidence of reputable witnesses. On the other hand, it was contended that when an election agent goes about amongst the voters during the election showing his money about, he falls at once under suspicion. These general considerations are, after all, of very little utility. What we have to consider is whether we have credible evidence affording clear proof of the offences charged. Can we safely rely upon the evidence of Edwards for our finding upon this part of the case? His statements are uncorroborated by other witnesses, they are denied by witnesses for the respondent, and very little light is derived from surrounding circumstances. That being so, one very important consideration will be the credence due to the evidence of Edwards, having regard to his general character and his conduct in this case. It does not necessarily follow that his evidence should be rejected merely because his general reputation is bad. We should still be obliged to scrutinise his conduct in matters relevant to the case itself. I do not think it would serve any good purpose to describe the character of Edwards in detail, but I must say at once that upon his own admissions, his reputation in respect of honesty and truthfulness stands very low. Such being his general character, he was employed by what he calls "the Fremantle party" to work up this case, and he was to be paid any expenses he was put to in getting information for them. In endeavouring to obtain evidence, he told Moses and Steele that if they gave information there would be a trip to Cape Town for them if the case was tried there, together with their expenses, and to Halley he said the people whom he (Halley) had befriended by giving information would give him a passage Home. He says he told plenty of lies for the edification of people who tried to get information from him, and that it was quite possible he might have said the Bond had promised him a free passage to England. Edwards and Halstead went up to Aberdeen, and lived there for some time at the expense of those who managed the case for the petitioner. One of the attorneys of the petitioner paid for the board and lodging of the witnesses who were sent up to Aberdeen, and gave them a few pounds to keep them going. This procedure was certainly very ill-advised, and the justification offered was that it was necessary to secure the evidence, and prevent the witnesses being got at. But considering the character of Edwards, these proceedings were quite as likely to prove an inducement to give false evidence as to secure an adherence to the truth. However, the result of all this evidence is that Edwards, by his employment, became an interested witness; that he is convicted of having made statements before the trial relative to the subject matter of the cause inconsistent with his evidence at the trial, and that in giving his testimony, he has been subject to the influence of improper inducements. Taking all this in connection with his previous character, and the circumstances as to time and place when and where the offences are alleged to have been committed by Glannan, I feel no hesitation in entirely rejecting his evidence, which is in conflict with that of the respondent's witnesses. And I find that the following charges have not been proved, viz., Schedule A3, Schedule B, Schedule C3, and that part of Schedule D2 which refers to Edwards. Having dealt at some length with the case of Edwards, the consideration of those of Graham and Halstead will be shortened, in so far as they are affected by the same general condition. The charges in connection with Graham come under Schedule A2 and Schedule D2. Graham says that on the morning of Tuesday, the day of the election, Glannan spoke to him, and upon being asked by Graham who would pay his expenses if he went to vote, Glannan said "Your expenses will be all right." I said, "I want my expenses before I leave." He took me out of sight of the people in the passage and gave me 10s. 6d. Before I came away he said, "Don't forget to meet me at the station," and he gave me another shilling. He says he had promised to go and see Glannan on the previous Saturday, but did not go. Glannan, on the other hand, says he saw Graham at seven o'clock on Saturday night at the Masonic Hotel, and spoke to him about the election, but neither promised nor paid him anything, and did not see him at all on Monday. Here again we have a direct conflict of evidence upon which we have to decide. I may here refer to a contention advanced by counsel for the petitioner, when he argued that although certain of the witnesses might not be quite reputable, and their evidence singly might not be regarded as reliable, they might yet be taken generally as supporting one another, and thus on the whole making out a good case. Such an argument might be sound where the Court entertains doubt of the veracity of a witness, and requires corroboration to remove the doubt, but it cannot apply where the evidence of witnesses has been entirely rejected as false, as in the case of Edwards. In deciding between Graham and Glannan, I feel myself obliged, through lack of other aids, to resort to evidence of a character similar to that in the case of Edwards. Graham says he was first spoken to by Edwards about this case, but before that, and before he knew that any case was coming on, he went upon invitation of a man called Fletcher, a private inquiry agent, to his office, and there made a statement that was taken down in writing. The statement contains the following allegations, amongst others: "I afterwards saw Glannan on Tuesday, the 12th inst. He asked me if I was going to vote. He did not give me any drink or money, neither did he promise me any. I was not asked whom I was going to vote for or was told who to vote for." In his evidence Graham says: "The statement is a parcel of lies from beginning to end. I told them to Fletcher because he had no right to ask these questions." This man was also taken to Aberdeen, where his expenses were paid by Moore, at the request of Schoeman, Fremantle's election agent. He was sent to Aberdeen to prevent his being got at in Port Elizabeth, but he himself says that he went to Aberdeen because he was sent for by Edwards, who had work for him there. In this case we have a direct illustration of the danger of holding out inducements to a witness like Graham to adhere to a statement once made by him. It is impossible to say what might have happened if sufficient inducement had been held out to keep him to the statement made by him to Fletcher. Graham had been shown not to be a truthful witness, and, with the exception of previous general bad character, similar considerations exist in his case to those which operated in the case of Edwards. It is therefore impossible for me to find upon his evidence that the charges in Schedule A2 and Schedule D2 have been proved. The next charge I shall take is the one under Schedule 2, which alleges that Glannan promised Halstead, who was not a registered voter, money or other valuable consideration to induce him to personate Clement Bauer, a registered voter, and to vote for Mills. Halstead says he did not know Glannan before the election, but was introduced to him by Edwards in the billiard-room of the Masonic Hotel on the evening of Monday, the 11th of July. "The conversation," he says, "turned on the Uitenhage election, and Glannan asked me if I would vote for their party?" I said, "Which party?" He said, "The Progressives party." I said, "I have no vote in the Uitenhage division." He replied, "We can fix that up all right." I said, "But I am not entitled to vote." "Then," he goes on in his evidence, "the beer came in. Glannan gave me the card produced. He said, 'I could vote in that man's name, as I was a mechanic as well.' I put the card in my pocket without looking at it. I took it home and showed it to Edwards. Glannan said he would pay my expenses. After that he called for a bottle of champagne, but someone took him out." As a matter of fact, Halstead did not go to Uitenhage to vote. He says he gave the card, which contains the name of Clement Bauer to Fremantle on the Saturday after the election. Edwards, who was present in the billiard-room, and speaks of the beer-drinking and ordering of champagne, says nothing of the conversation between Glannan and Halstead. Glannan says, "I did not ask Halstead to personate anyone. I do not know Halstead. I did not see his face until he was pointed out to me yesterday." Glannan did not fill in Bauer's card. Spittal states that on the evening of the 11th July he was with Glannan all the evening. He met him a little after six o'clock, and saw him into bed after eight o'clock. Glannan was not in the billiard room at all that night. Spittal was at the time of the election in the employment of Mills, who is described as a private banker or money-lender. The evidence of Halstead briefly amounts to this: That Glannan, who was a perfect stranger to him, meets him in the public billiard room, where there were others present, and without much ado requests him to proceed to Uitenhage to personate a voter, offering to pay his expenses. This is directly denied by Glannan, and indirectly contradicted by Spittal. It appears that the card bearing Bauer's name was not in the handwriting of Glannan, although there is evidence that other voters' cards given out by him were filled in by him as they were required. Here again the question of credibility comes in. Mr. Hofmeyr says he advised that Halstead, amongst others, should be sent away from Port Elizabeth. He paid as the keep of the men while they were away in all £29 on behalf of Edwards and Halstead. He also gave Halstead £2 10s. No arrangement was made for the money to be returned, and he did not expect to get it back. Halstead, on the other hand, states he will have to repay the money for his expenses, part of which, besides what was paid by Hofmeyr, was paid by Moore. Halstead lived at the hotel at Aberdeen at the rate of £6 10s. per month, and does not know how much he owes Moore. I think there can be no doubt that this is false, and that he was well aware that he was living at the expense of Fremantle's agents. He admits he was sent to Aberdeen by Hofmeyr along with Edwards, and could not possibly have contemplated going there at his own expense. Then he says he worked for a time at Aberdeen, whereas Edwards says there was no work for him there. Here, then, we have Halstead contradicted by Glannan and Spittal, unsupported by Edwards, who was present at the alleged conversation; we have untruthfulness on the part of Halstead; we have conduct operating as an inducement held out to give evidence favourable to petitioner; and a degree of improbability attaching to his story. On the whole, I come to the conclusion that the petitioner has failed to establish the charge in Schedule C2. Lastly we come to the case of Babb, which differs in some important respects from the others. Babb says he was asked by Glannan to go to the Masonic Hotel on Friday, the 8th of July, but he did not go till Monday night, when he went there in consequence of a message delivered by Jack Price. He went into the bar and spoke to Glannan, there being no one else present. Glannan said, "Are you coming up to-morrow?" I said, "Yes, but what about my day's pay?" He did not say to me what I was to come up for. He said, "How much a day are you getting?" I replied, "10s. 6d.; but want 2s. 3d. for my train fare." He said he would pay me that, and he adds Glannan gave Price the money to give him half, and Price gave him 12s. 9d. at the next bar lower down the street. Glannan, on the other hand, says on the evening of Monday he was at the bar of the Masonic Hotel in company with Spittal, and stood drinks to the Buffs, there being a number of persons present. Price came up to him and asked him for the two sovereigns he had lent him on Saturday. He saw Babb there, but did not speak to him. Spittal was present when the money was paid to Price, no portion of which was intended for Babb. Spittal says, "I did not see Babb there that evening. He certainly was not with Glannan, because I was with Glannan all the evening. I am certain he never spoke to Glannan that evening." Price states that on Monday evening he went to the Masonic to get the money he had lent to Glannan on the Saturday. On the way he met Babb, who said he was going to see Glannan. At the Masonic he asked Glannan for his two sovereigns, and got it in gold. Glannan never said anything to Babb about the election; if he had, Price must have heard it. Price, Babb, and others then left for another bar, where Babb, according to Price, said if he had his day's pay he would stand a drink. Price said, "How much do you want?" He said 10s. 6d. for his wages and 2s. 3d. for his ticket. Price said, "I will give you the 12s. 9d." Price afterwards demanded his money back, but Babb said that part of the money which Glannan had paid to Price was for his day's wages for going to vote. Now the bare statement made by Babb as to what passed between him and Glannan, contradicted as it is by three witnesses, leaves the matter in a very unsatisfactory state; but it is certainly true that in some respects what took place between him and Price does seem to support his evidence of some promise having been made by Glannan. However, when carefully examined, there seems to be a hiatus in his evidence—an important link wanting, which makes it difficult to follow him. According to him, money was paid to Price, of which he was to get half; but when Glannan gave Price the money, he did not hear what passed between them. No reason is given why Glannan did not pay Babb himself, and Babb does not know how much was paid to Price. Price says he got the money in repayment of a loan, and there is nothing to contradict him unless it be the fact that he gave 12s. 9d. to Babb. Babb did not say that anything was said or done by Glannan to show that he was to receive a portion of the money paid to Price. Even if a promise was made to him, there was nothing to connect that promise, by word or deed of Glannan with the money paid to Price. If Price paid on account of Glannan, how was it that he afterwards demanded the money back from Babb? Price said he paid nothing on account of Glannan, and Babb, when asked how he knew that he was to get half the money given to Price—not having heard what Glannan said to Price—gave the following inconsequential answer: "I was standing there when he gave Price the sovereign and the silver. I do not know whether he owed Price any money, but I was told to get half—that is 12s. 9d." Glannan could only be held responsible for the payment by Price, or be looked upon as principal in the transaction, if the payment was made in consequence of something said or done by himself, and no information upon that point could be discovered in Babb's evidence. It must be borne in mind that under this charge the actual payment of the money must be proved, and not merely the promise. Babb, upon the evidence, was wholly ignorant of what took place between Glannan and Price, and there was nothing to disprove their statement that the money repaid was a loan, and had nothing to do with Babb. In that case there was no proof that the money Babb got from Price was paid on account of Glannan, and the petitioner must fail in that part of the case also. He did not wish it to be supposed that his decision upon the evidence would have been otherwise if the promise to pay had been charged instead of the actual payment, because if Babb's evidence as to the payment was rejected, his statement as to the promise was seriously impeached. He had not lost sight of the important bearing on the case of the evidence of the occurrences at the barber's shop and of Glannan's admitted intercourse with the witnesses in the case. When an election agent went about flourishing the money he carried with him and boasting of what he would be able to perform with it, he brought himself under grave suspicion. But he was afraid suspicion very readily attached to election agents, who seldom went about with empty pockets in view of the legitimate expenses they might be put to. Circumstances of suspicion might operate very seriously against such agent where the weight of evidence was uncertain in the balance, but they were of less importance where the petitioner's case failed through its own inherent weakness. Again, where negotiations took place between an election agent and voters of doubtful character, he would on occasion find it of no avail to try to escape by reflections upon their reputation. It was the duty of the Court to examine the evidence with an eye upon all those considerations, and to find the facts upon the whole of the case. Upon such of the charges contained in the petition as had not been dealt with in the judgment, the petitioner offered no evidence, and upon the rest he had, in his opinion, failed to prove his case. The Court therefore determined that the respondent was duly elected. Petitioner was ordered to pay costs.

Hopley, J.: In this matter the petitioner, who was the unsuccessful candidate at the election held in July last for the representation of Uitenhage, in which constituency an additional seat had been created by the Additional Representation Act of 1904, seeks to unseat the respondent, who was the successful candidate, on the grounds of bribery, treating, counselling to personate, and carrying electors to and from the poll by paying moneys for their railway fares, which illegal acts were, it is alleged, committed by one James Glannan, who had been appointed a sub-agent for the respondent in the conduct of the electoral contest in question. The particulars of these offences against the election laws, in so far as they have not been abandoned, set forth: (1) That the said Glannan bribed three voters, registered as such for the said electoral division, to wit, George James Bubb and Thomas Graham, by giving each of them the sum of 10s. 6d. to vote for the respondent or to refrain from voting for the petitioner, and one John Edwards, by corruptly promising him money or valuable consideration to induce him to vote for the respondent. (2) That the said Glannan treated four registered voters, viz., the said Edwards, one Halley, one Smith, and one Cheney to free drinks for the purpose of inducing them to vote for the respondent or to refrain from voting for the petitioner. (3) That the said Glannan, by means of promises of money, endeavoured to induce and corruptly counselled one Sydney Halstead and the aforesaid Edwards to personate certain absent voters, and to record votes in their names. And (4) that the said Glannan paid the aforesaid registered voter, George Bubb, the sum of 2s. 3d., to convey him by railway to the polling station of Uitenhage from Port Elizabeth and back again, and that he also promised to pay the aforesaid Edwards and the aforesaid Graham their railway fare to and from the poll. The facts disclosed by the evidence show that Dr. Vanes, of Uitenhage, was the election agent for the respondent, and that he appointed one Japhta, a coloured man, and the said James Glannan as sub-agents. Shortly before the date of the poll, which was fixed for Tuesday, 12th July, Dr. Vanes became ill, and Glannan admits that he then became virtually the respondent's chief agent, and was practically "running the election." This would not render any illegal acts of his more illegal, or give an air of illegality to acts otherwise innocent; but it is nevertheless a fact to be borne in mind, as tending to prove that Glannan would be more upon his mettle, and would strain every nerve and make every possible endeavour to secure a victory. It was known that the struggle would be a close one, and in such a case there was every inducement and temptation to any, save the most scrupulous, agent to disregard the provisions of the law, if by so doing he could secure, or be likely to secure, a successful issue to the contest. The constituency in question has for its near neighbour the important town of Port Elizabeth, and it is to be expected that many of the voters, especially of the labouring classes, are at all times likely to be attracted to that larger field, and that anyone who loses a situation in Uitenhage would almost naturally gravitate or migrate to the more hopeful and possibly more attractive centre. Such, at all events, when the lists were scanned, seems to have been the case in the present instance, and it was found that a number of Uitenhage voters, probably sufficient to turn the scale, had gone to Port Elizabeth, and were in many instances to be found there. To procure them, then, would naturally become the wish of any election agent, and in all probability both sides made efforts to attain this object. It is with Glannan's efforts in this direction that the Court is concerned, and it becomes material to inquire and discover, if possible, what manner of man he was, and whether he was likely to be in such circumstances highly scrupulous or somewhat lax in the interpretation of the duties and obligations incident to his anxious and responsible position. The evidence shows that he was a keen partisan, with considerable experience in electoral contests, and with an intimate knowledge of a section of the electorate, that especially which consisted of the white men employed in the Uitenhage workshops, or in the railways as artisans or mechanics. A great many of these he seems to have habitually known and addressed by their Christian names, generally in the diminutive form, and as far as I could judge, he was always ready to drink with any of them at any time, if only there were a convenient bar or public-house, as, so far as this case is concerned, there invariably was. There is nothing, however, in these characteristics to distinguish him from the considerable (I mean numerically considerable) class who seem to think that popularity, hilarity, and good-fellowship depend mainly upon excessive familiarity and frequent and indiscriminate hospitality at canteens and drinking bars; and though they may indicate a not particularly fastidious disposition, they do not necessarily imply a want of scruple or a tendency to do dishonourable or illegal acts; but some further light is thrown upon his character in the role of an election agent by the evidence of the witnesses Parkin and Adcock, which I believe to be quite accurate and trustworthy. It should be borne in mind that both these witnesses are politically opposed to the petitioner, and are, in that sense, unwilling witnesses in his favour, and not likely to exaggerate any point which is likely to tell against the respondent, with whom they are politically in sympathy. They state that on the day before the poll, Glannan, in Adcock's shop, in the presence of themselves and one or two others—all being, however, of the same political party—displayed a considerable sum of money, saying that that was what he had to "do with" for the election; that Adcock thereupon warned him to be careful of the "Beck Act," and that he then retorted, "I know more about elections than you or your grandfather, and I can drive a coach and four through the Beck Act," or words to that effect. Glannan, it is true, tries to put a different construction on both the production of the purse, which he alleges he produced for the purpose of offering a bet on the result of the election, and that he flourished a five-pound note for that purpose only. He swears that all the money in the purse was his own private money, and that it was no more than £10. He admits that he said he was so keenly interested in the result that he was prepared to spend the whole of that sum (his private money) on getting the boys (meaning the Uitenhage voters resident in Port Elizabeth) up to vote; and as to the words about the Beck Act, he admits that it was referred to, but that all he gave vent to was something in the nature of a prognostication that people would soon be driving a coach and four through it. As I have intimated, I do not believe him. I do believe Parkin and Adcock, and I do not think that there was any room for a mistake on their part. It should be observed that this conversation took place on the Monday, the day before the polling, when Glannan was on the point of starting for Port Elizabeth. He had gone to that town on Friday, 8th July, and had stayed there, at the Masonic Hotel, until Sunday, 10th July; and on Monday, 11th July, he was starting again for the same place, and did actually go shortly after the episode in Adcock's shop. He wishes the Court to believe that he went to Port Elizabeth, not mainly in connection with electioneering matters, but primarily to collect some rents (apparently of no great amount) which were due to his wife and to an estate in which he was the curator bonis, and that he took the opportunity to look up some of the "boys" i.e., Uitenhage electors. He swears that on the Monday he again went in connection with the same business, and he wishes the Court to infer that he was not in such circumstances likely to be thinking much of the Uitenhage election or to be making strenuous and illegal endeavours to get every possible voter to go there. Again I do not believe him. It is to my mind inconceivable that a keen electioneering agent on whom had devolved the conduct of the campaign should be wasting his time, as he would have the Court believe, on the eve of the decisive battle; and I feel certain that he was in Port Elizabeth from the Friday until the election day (with exception of portions of Sunday and Monday) for the purpose of ensuring the presence at the polling-stations of the contingent which he could procure from that town. Now while I believe that he was there for that purpose and that he went from Uitenhage with a considerable sum of money about which he had made the remarks I have detailed in the presence of Adcock and Parkin, and while these things and his general demeanour predispose my mind to believe him capable of committing irregularities, and even likely to commit them; it still is necessary to look for proof, and strict proof, that such irregularities and breaches of the law as are alleged against him were actually committed by him. These charges to a very great extent depend upon the evidence of Edwards, Graham, and Halstead (I am for the moment leaving out of consideration the evidence of the witness Bubb to which I shall come later). Now with regard to those three men it is not too much to say that in a case like the present they are totally unworthy of credence. Two of them, Edwards and Graham, confess, and apparently without much sense of shame, to a past so disreputable and to actions so disgraceful that in any charge brought by them against a fellow-creature in which their own sordid interests or their own base motives were, or might be, concerned, any judge would warn a jury that they should exercise the very greatest caution before they accepted their evidence or found anything proved from so tainted a source. Not only are they in themselves not worthy of belief, but it is clear that inducements have been held out to them which might be quite sufficient to induce men of that stamp to make false charges which they might be ready to support by perjured evidence. As to Halstead there is not so much to be said against him; but it is significant that he was at the time of the election out of employment—that he was living with Edwards, whose "chum" he is alleged to have been—that he went up to Uitenhage at the time of or immediately after the election and tendered information to the petitioner, that inducements were held out to him by agents of the petitioner, (but there is nothing to indicate that this was done with the knowledge of the petitioner himself), and that since that date he has been living at the expense of the petitioner or of his political adherents. With regard to all these men it has been shown that when they had made their statements—statements on which the bulk of the charges in this petition are based—they could not be trusted by their own side not to vary or change them; that they were in consequence of such fears taken away to the somewhat remote village of Aberdeen, and that they have been there kept in idleness at hotels at the expense of the petitioner or of his political party. Of what use can evidence from such sources be when the result of accepting it would entail such serious results as would necessarily follow? I am far from saying that the things they swear to did not happen. Having regard to their own characters it is quite possible that such illegalities were committed; for they themselves, especially Edwards and Graham, would readily lend themselves as accomplices, if only it were made worth their while; but it is impossible to find so upon their unsupported testimony. Such being my feeling as regards these men and their testimony it follows, upon an analysis of the grounds of complaint against the respondent, and of the evidence supporting them, that they all fail save those which allege that Glannan bribed George James Bubb to vote by a payment of 10s. 6d., and that he also provided him with 2s. 3d. for his train fare to and from Uitenhage. These charges rest upon the evidence of Bubb himself, but not, I think, entirely—as I shall endeavour to show. Against Bubb personally nothing has been advanced which in any way tends to throw discredit on him. He is a man who resided for some time in Uitenhage, and who has for the last 16 months been in the employ of the Harbour Board at Port Elizabeth as a riveter. His past and his present conduct are therefore well known, and it is certain that if anything could have been adduced to bring him into disrepute or to impugn his veracity it would have been forthcoming. His evidence amounts to this, that on July 8, Glannan, accompanied by one Polson, an ex-publican, who used to reside at one time in Uitenhage, and who seems to have been somewhat active as a sub-agent of Glannan's in Port Elizabeth for purposes of the election, came to him on the jetty, where he was at work, that Glannan began to talk about the Uitenhage election by implication, mentioning the respondent's name, saying that he "had seen Mills about him," and asking him to come down that night to the Masonic Hotel—where Glannan was (as is admitted) staying; that he did not go that night to the hotel, and that next day he received a message purporting to come from Glannan through one Price, who also worked at the same jetty; that in consequence of this message he went on Monday night, July 11, to the Masonic, where he saw Glannan, and had a short, but significant, conversation with him, Glannan asking him if he was going to Uitenhage the following day, to which he replied, "Yes, but what about my day's pay?" to which Glannan rejoined by asking how much it was, and Bubb informed him 10s. 6d. for the day's pay and 2s. 3d. for train fare; whereupon, he swears, Glannan said that those sums would be paid to him. He further deposes that immediately thereafter he saw Glannan give into the hand of Price a sovereign and silver, of which he concluded he was to get half, or at all events 12s. 9d. (for he seems to have drawn the inference that Price had made a similar bargain with Glannan). He further relates that he and Price then left that bar and went to another in the neighbourhood, and that Price there handed over to him the exact amount of 12s. 9d. It is true that the word "election" was not used, but if Bubb's evidence is correct this money could have reached him for no other purpose than to induce him to go to the election and record his vote for Mills. Taken in conjunction with Glannan's remark on the jetty that he had spoken to Mills about him, his next remark a few days later, "Are you coming to Uitenhage to-morrow?" and what immediately followed could bear only one interpretation. Again, Bubb admits that he did not hear Glannan say to Price that he was to pay over any of the money to him, but he quite understood in his own mind that he was to have some, viz., 12s. 9d. of the money which he saw passing from Glannan to Price. Now, if the whole of Bubb's story were contradicted or if only that portion of it which narrates that Price handed over 12s. 9d. at the next bar to him were contested, I should not be inclined to find this matter proved as against Glannan. But Price, who was called as a witness for the respondent, was obliged to admit, or, in fact, he never denied, that at the next bar he handed the exact sum of 12s. 9d., part of the money he had just received from Glannan, over to Bubb. What is the inference to be drawn from such evidence? To my mind, it seems to be clearly proved that money which was admittedly paid over by Glannan to Price was—as to the sum of 12s. 9d., a part of it—within a few minutes passed over by Price to Bubb. It is also clearly established that Bubb went next day to Uitenhage and voted, and that he lost 10s. 6d., a day's pay at his ordinary work. These facts, taken in conjunction with Bubb's evidence, which I saw no reason to doubt, or to think was given dishonestly, lead me irresistibly to the conclusion that the money passed in the way described from Glannan to Bubb, on the understanding and for the considerations as detailed by Bubb. My feeling is strengthened rather than weakened by the evidence given by Glannan and Price to account for the facts (which they could not deny) that money passed from Glannan to Price and from Price to Bubb. To explain all this, Glannan and Price swear that on the Saturday night, Glannan, finding himself running short of money, had met Price, and asked him for a loan of £3. Price, it is alleged, was at the time walking in the street with his wife and four small children. The family (which we are told has within the last month or so received an increase). Price was supporting on a wage of about £3 a week. Nevertheless, it is said that Mrs. Price, to whom the week's wages had been given, made no difficulty about letting Glannan have £2, all she could spare, on loan until the Monday night. This, of course, is possible, though improbable; but if such a thing really did happen, it seems wholly unlikely that Glannan and Price would differ as to what immediately followed. Glannan swears that as soon as the money was lent, he and Price and Mrs. Price went into the back bar of the hotel and had a drink together—what became of the children he does not say—while Price is positive that his wife went into no bar and had no drink with him and Glannan. This peculiar story, suspicious in itself, is told to account for Glannan's having to hand money to Price on the Monday night; but it is obvious that the handing of the 12s. 9d. part of that amount to Bubb immediately afterwards must also be explained away, and for this purpose another loan (again from the open-handed Price) is brought forward. Price states that on the Monday night his wife sent him to the Masonic to fetch the £2 from Glannan (an action on her part extremely likely, if she had ever parted with it in the manner described). He adds that on the way he met Bubb, who told him that he was on his way to the Masonic to see Glannan, and that he and Bubb waited for Glannan at the Masonic. Presently Glannan arrived, and it is at this time that Bubb alleges that he had the conversation with Glannan. Glannan and Price, however, both swear that Bubb had no conversation with the former, and we are asked to believe that a man who had just told Price he was going to the Masonic to see Glannan, and who had waited for Glannan, left the place without a word of any kind passing between them. That, however, is by the way. What we know is that Bubb and Price left the Masonic together, and Price alleges that Bubb then wished to treat him and a couple of others to drinks, and that he said: "If I had my day's pay, I would stand drinks." Price adds that he then said, "How much do you want, then?" to which Bubb replied, "10s. 6d. for my day's pay and 2s. 3d. for my railway fare." And Price says that he thereupon agreed to lend Bubb the sum of 12s. 9d., and handed over that exact amount to him then and there. This whole story seems to me to bristle with improbabilities. If ever Bubb said anything about his day's pay, there was no necessity for Price, who worked with him at the Jetty, and who knew it exactly, to ask how much it was. Nor can I conceive how, in answer to the question of how much he wanted, put in such circumstances, Bubb could possibly have replied, "10s. 6d. for my day's pay and 2s. 3d. for my railway fare." Price says he lent Bubb that exact sum, understanding how it was arrived at, thinking that someone had promised him a day's pay and his fare to Uitenhage; but he would not say who he thought had made such promise; in fact, he says that Babb had told him that same day that some one had promised him his day's pay and his fare to go to Uitenhage and vote. The impression made by the whole of the explanation, and the story of the double loan, upon my mind, is that it is a tissue of inventions, and I believe that the true history of the 12s. 9d., which undoubtedly reached Babb's hands very shortly after it left Glannan's, is that set forth in Babb's own evidence. If, therefore, this matter depended upon my sole verdict, I should feel constrained to hold that the portions of the petitioner's case which set forth illegal practices in connection with procuring Babb's vote, and his attendance at Uitenhage had been proved. I cannot say there is no room for doubt, for that exists ab initio from the fact that Babb admits that he was willing to fall in with an illegal and immoral bargain, whereby he was to receive a pecuniary consideration for going to Uitenhage to record his vote; that he received the money; and that he did in consequence go to Uitenhage and record his vote. Still, his evidence is so strongly corroborated by the concomitant circumstances, that in my opinion a jury trying this matter as a criminal charge would have been justified in returning a verdict of guilty. But I am bound to bear in mind that I am only one member of the tribunal which has to deliver a verdict on this important matter—a matter which it is right to treat as strictly as a criminal trial, and upon which there should, if possible, be unanimity—at all events for the purpose of finding corrupt practices proved—a finding which would entail the consequence that in the opinion of the Court Glannan had been guilty of criminal acts subjecting him to serious disabilities and considerable pains and penalties. These considerations have weighed with me, and, though they have not affected my own conviction, and though I shall not on that account shrink from carrying my finding to its logical and legitimate conclusion, still, I feel that I am constrained to approach the question of what the verdict of the Court should be from a different standpoint, and to examine the result I have arrived at in relation to the effect produced by the evidence upon the mind of my learned colleague on the Bench, and to the sentiments entertained by him upon the whole of the case. My learned brother entertains grave doubts as to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish any of the charges, including the two as to which I personally am ready to find for the petitioner; and though I have laid my views on these before him as strongly as I was able to do, I have failed to remove those doubts, which still remain in his mind of so serious and substantial a nature as to render it impossible for him to find these charges proved. In view of the great experience of the learned judge, and of the care which he has devoted to this case, I cannot but feel that his opinion is entitled to the highest respect, that, in fact it raises very strongly a presumption that possibly my own feelings may be too absolute and my finding beyond what is warranted by the evidence. I cannot abandon my own view, but I am faced by the fact that in the eyes of a judge of great ability and experience the evidence is not satisfactory, or sufficient to enable him to find that the petitioner has made out any portion of his case. In the face of such doubts, so seriously entertained in such a quarter. I feel bound to inquire whether I should be justified in persisting that my own view must necessarily be the right one, and that our verdict shall be in accordance with conclusions which I can arrive at, but which my colleague finds it impossible to reach. In similar circumstances at Criminal Sessions where there has been a conscientious difference of opinion among sensible men composing a jury. I have always advised that portion of the panel which favoured a conviction that it was their duty to respect, and probably to yield to the opinion of those who favoured an acquittal. I can draw no distinction, in principle, between such circumstances and the present case, and, adopting the rule which I am ready to lay down for the guidance of others and applying it to myself, I feel that I should acquiesce in a verdict for the respondent.

Mr. Burton said that he would like to address their lordships in regard to the matter of costs. He would ask the Court under the circumstances disclosed, and the view which the Court took of the whole case, to say that it was not a case in which the petitioner should be saddled with the costs. He founded the application substantially upon two grounds. One was the extremely unsatisfactory conduct throughout the history of the case of the sub-agent of the respondent (Glannan), upon whose acts the petition was founded. He submitted that Glannan's conduct had been of such a nature as to justify the claim of the petitioner that there should be no order as to costs. There was a precedent for such a course. In the case of Burton v. Rhodes and Hill (9 Sheil, 2)—he was sorry to have to mention this case—one of the agents of the respondents had issued a false statement in the form of a circular, setting forth to the electors on the very eve of the election that the respondents had thrown open certain diggings with a view of influencing the electors. That a false statement was issued was proved; but the Court found that it did not come within the terms of the Act as to bribery, but disapproved of the conduct of the respondents' agent. There was also another charge against the agent, but this also was not held to be bribery. Although the petition failed on strict legal grounds, the Court expressed its very strong dissatisfaction with the conduct of the agents, and, on that ground, disallowed the respondents their costs, and no order as to costs was, therefore, made. The second ground on which he (Mr. Burton) asked their lordships to follow this precedent was that, although the petition failed on the finding of the Court, yet the circumstances were of such a nature that it was in the public interest that the investigation should be proceeded with, and that the suspicious nature of the circumstances justified the investigation. In such circumstances, it had been held both in England and in our Courts that there was a just and proper ground for disallowing costs to the successful party. Counsel cited the cases of De Waal v. Sircwright (9 Sheil, 12) and Harding v. Sauer (9 Sheil, 51). He added that he pressed the question of costs, especially in view of the difference of opinion expressed by their lordships in regard to Babb's evidence. He submitted that it was a clear case in which the Court should say that, although the petitioner had failed, the petitioner should not be saddled with the respondent's costs.

Maasdorp, J.: We have come to the conclusion that this is a case where we ought to follow the ordinary rule, viz., that the unsuccessful party should pay the costs. It has been stated that we ought to vary the rule to some extent, because of the unsatisfactory conduct of the respondent's agent; but I think we might look at the case from another point of view, and, in inquiring whether it was a proper case to bring before the Court, we ought to ascertain how this case does come before the Court. We have both expressed our opinions that the manner in which the witnesses were brought before the Court was not such as to commend itself to the Court, and I think that, after the petitioner had become aware, or his advisers had become aware, of the character of those witnesses, and the necessity there was to safeguard them in such a way as to prevent them failing the petitioner, the petitioner should himself have said that this was not a proper case upon which to go into court. I think that when the advisers of the petitioner saw what unsatisfactory witnesses they were, he should have said, "It is not in the public interest upon such evidence to try to unseat the man who has been elected." Upon those grounds, I think that, though there may be some unsatisfactory points on the part of the respondent, this, in my opinion, is not a case in which it was in the public interest to come into court.

[Petitioner's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers; Respondent's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinne.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CIVIL APPEALS.

MULLER BROS. V. LOMBARD. { 1904.
Nov. 24th.
" 30th.

Power of attorney to sue—Signature by trustee for self and co-trustees.

Where an action is brought by two or more trustees of an insolvent estate, the power of attorney to sue must be signed by or on behalf of all the trustees, but where one of the trustees produces a power signed by his co-trustee or co-trustees to sign the power to sue on his or their behalf, it is not a sufficient objection to such power to sue that it is signed by only one trustee "for self and co-trustees."

The cases of Trustees of Dodds v. Watson (1 Menz. 140) and Walker v. Beeton's Trustees (Buch. for 1868, p. 225, and for 1869, p. 38) distinguished.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Malmesbury, who had upheld an exception taken by the defendant, Lombard, in the court below to a summons on the ground that it was informal.

From the record it appeared that an action was instituted in the court below by the trustees in the insolvent estate of Muller against the respondent to recover a certain debt. The power of attorney was signed by one of the trustees (Koetze) on behalf of himself and the co-trustee, and an exception was taken by the defendant to the summons on the ground that the power was not in order, as it was signed only by Mr. Koetze. The defendant's attorney cited the cases of Trustees of Dodds v. Watson (1 Menz., 140), and Walker v. Beeton's Trustees (Buch. 1868, 225, and 1869, 38. In reply, the plaintiff's attorney stated that the power of Attorney from Foot (the town trustee) to Koetze and the appointment of both trustees were handed to the Clerk of the Court before the issue of the summons, and that Koetze had repeatedly shown these documents to the Resident Magistrate of the court, and he tendered that he had authority, including the authority of Foot, to sue.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that in view of the clear ruling of the Supreme Court in the case of Walker and Co. v. Beeton's Trustees, he did not feel justified in dismissing the exception, as the attorney for the defendants objected to the informality being cured by the production of documents which had not formed part of the record. If the power of attorney had been signed twice by Koetze, once for himself and once q.q. for his co-trustee, the document would have been in order. The defendant's attorney insisted upon claiming a dismissal of the summons, and he (the Resident Magistrate) had no option but to uphold the exception.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the appellant; Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

Sir H. Juta submitted that the Magistrate in this case might very well have rectified the informality, if any, in the summons. The power of attorney was not signed by the trustee alone. It was signed by one trustee for himself and for the co-trustee, and therefore it simply became a question of evidence whether or not the person signing had the authority to sign for the other. This case differed from the others, inasmuch as in the others there was no proof either given or tendered that the one trustee had the power to act on behalf of his co-trustee, whereas in this case, as was stated, the power of attorney from the one trustee to the other and the appointment of both were handed in to the Clerk of the Court before the issue of the summons. Counsel cited the case of Dodds, King and Co. v. Watson (1 Menz. Reports, 140). As to the case of Walker v. Beeton's Trustees (Buchanan's Reports, 1868, 225), he submitted that that case differed entirely from the present matter in appeal, because in that case there was no authority from the one trustee to the other. He submitted that the Magistrate was in error in the present instance.

Mr. Burton contended that the Magistrate was correct in his judgment, because, although, as he (the Resident Magistrate) had pointed out in this particular case, no prejudice could occur, for subsequently the necessary documents were produced, still the question for him was that an exception had been taken to the summons with the power attached and filed in the suit. Up to that stage the summons was clearly out of order, because the decision in the case referred to in the Magistrate's reasons showed clearly that the phrase "for self and co-trustee" involved no authority from the co-trustee to the trustee who was suing. "For self and co-trustee" really meant nothing. The plaintiff came into court with a summons which was clearly not in order. He did not attempt or apply to amend the summons, but he maintained it was enough. He submitted that the plaintiff's attorney was negligent in not seeing that those documents were in proper order. If the appeal were upheld, he suggested that the question of costs should be referred to the Magistrate for determination.

Sir H. Juta having addressed the Court in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate very properly refused to give any decision that would run counter to what he conceived to be a decision of the Supreme Court. Therefore, if he was right in assuming that the decision of the Supreme Court was that a warrant to sue signed by one of two trustees is not sufficient in any case to support a summons for provisional sentence, then he was right in allowing the exception. The whole mistake, in my opinion, arose out of the fact that the head-note of the case reported in L. Menzies, 140, is not quite correct. The Court did not decide, as the head-note says, that "a warrant of attorney to sue, signed by one of two trustees, for self and co-trustee, is not sufficient." It should have been added: "In the absence of proof that the trustee so signing was authorised by his co-trustee to sign on his behalf." Unfortunately, the report itself is very brief, but it is there: "Against the plaintiff's claim for provisional sentence, the Attorney-General, for the defendant, objected that the power of attorney authorising the attorneys in this case to sue the defendant, was signed by one only of the two trustees." But it does not stop there. "And that his assertion, annexed to the signature, that he signed 'for self and co-trustee,' was not sufficient to obviate the objection." That is clear. Mere assertion is not enough. If there was proof adduced, however, that as a fact one trustee had authority to sign the warrant on behalf of his co-trustee the objection would vanish. If the trustee had signed twice, first for self and then for co-trustee, there can be no doubt that the warrant would be sufficient. But there is no particular virtue in two signatures, provided, of course, that there is authority to sign on behalf of the co-trustee. The case of Walker v. Beeton's Trustees (Buch. for 1868, p. 225, and for 1869, p. 38), does not carry the matter much further. The case of the appellant was merely put by Mr. Porter in his argument. "The second exception," he says, "is a good one. It raises this question: whether it is competent for one of two trustees to file a warrant to sue, as required by the Rules of Court for himself and his co-trustee, without producing some specific authority, in writing, from the co-trustee, authorising him to do so." That was the point. It is not whether these words are sufficient, but whether they are sufficient in the absence of a specific authority. I am quite satisfied that if the specific authority had been produced, the Court would not have allowed the exception.

But there was no authority whatever. The co-trustee was away in England, and the reasons given by the learned Judge, for the judgment, are reported in the reports of 1869—Sir Wm. Hodges had died before the formal judgment could be delivered, but he had written out his judgment before his death—are: "The objection urged by the exceptors is that the action had been improperly brought by Gowie, that the power of attorney ought to have been signed by Hall, and that it was not competent for Gowie to sign on his behalf. It was argued that the 56th section of the Insolvency Ordinance of 1843 authorised the trustees to commence any action in their own names, and that it was not competent for any of them to do so without the assent of the other, which consent ought to appear by his signing the warrant to sue. The objection to the sufficiency of a warrant of attorney to sue signed by one of two trustees 'for self and co-trustee' was held to be fatal in the case of the trustees of Dodds v. Watson (Menzies' Reports, 140), and I entirely concur in that decision. Many reasons may be urged for requiring that all the trustees to an insolvent estate should concur in commencing proceedings by action, which may be attended with great expense and loss to the creditors. The trustees are appointed by the Court to represent the interests of the creditors generally, and to see that no improper use is made of the funds which come to their hands as trustees." And Bell, J., said: "In regard to the second exception, that the power to sue was void, inasmuch as Gowie had no power to sign it for 'self and co-trustee,' without authority for so doing, it would seem to me that that also was well taken." Seeing that he had no authority, the power clearly was invalid. In the present case, it appeared that the proper power had been exhibited to the Magistrate. The power to sign was clearly proved. Clearly, there was sufficient power in Kotze to sign for himself and his co-trustee. The appeal must be allowed, and allowed with costs, because the exception was insisted upon by the defendant. He has failed now to support the exception on appeal. As to the costs in the court below, they must abide the result, because both the defendant and the Magistrate were misled by the erroneous head-note in the case reported in Men-sies. The appeal will be allowed with costs in this court, and the case remitted to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits, the question of costs in the court below to abide the result.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Berrange and Son; Respondent's Attorneys: D. Tennant, Junr.]

MULLER V. HOBBS.

1904.
Nov. 24th.
" 20th.

Guarantee—Actio quanti minoris—
Patent defect—Purchase and sale.

The plaintiff selected and bought several sheep out of the defendant's flock, and some of them were subsequently found to be infected with scab.

Held, that in the absence of any guarantee by the defendant that they were free from scab, he was not liable in the action, quanti minoris, and that, as he had no knowledge of the fact that the infection existed, he was not liable in damages for the expenses incurred by the plaintiff in dipping all the sheep by order of the scab inspector.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cathcart, dismissing an action brought by the appellant in the Court below for damages for alleged breach of warranty.

The summons was in the following terms: "The plaintiff complains that he (the defendant) owes him for damages £13 13s. 6d., on the following grounds: (1) On the 13th April, 1904, plaintiff purchased from defendant at the Dohne Stock Fair, by public auction, 300 sheep; on the 19th April he purchased from defendant, at defendant's farm in Cathcart, 350 sheep, by private treaty; and on the 27th April he purchased, at the Dohne Stock Fair, from defendant 201 sheep, by public auction. (2) Defendant led the plaintiff to believe that the abovementioned sheep were clean, and not infected with scab, on which representations plaintiff purchased the aforesaid 851 sheep from defendant. (3) That on the 11th May, 1904, Scab Inspector Frederick Fuller, of Stutterheim, examined the said sheep, and found scab amongst them two months old, and ordered plaintiff to have same dipped, whereby plaintiff incurred expenses of £13 13s. 6d., costs of dip, labour, etc. He now claims this amount as damage for breach of contract, which defendant refuses to pay."

At the hearing of the case, the defendant excepted to the summons on the ground that it was vague and bad in law, and disclosed no cause of action; that it did not state in paragraph 2 that the representations alleged to have been made by the defendant to the plaintiff in regard to the condition of the sheep were fraudulent, and that no time was stated when these alleged representations were made. The exception was over-ruled.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, said the plaintiff claimed a refund of the cost of dipping certain sheep bought from the defendant, on the ground that the sheep were infected with scab when he bought them. It was proved that the sheep were sold as alleged in the summons, and that two lots of the sheep were pronounced clean by the sheep inspector. The plaintiff had every opportunity of examining the sheep before they were removed. It was not alleged that the defendant knew that the sheep were infected with scab when he sold. The evidence went to show he had no such guilty knowledge, and that he had complied with all the regulations. It had not been proved that the vendor knowingly or wilfully deceived the vendee. The defendant appeared to have acted in a bona fide manner, and if the plaintiff were entitled to succeed, it would create a very dangerous precedent. There would be judgment for the defendant, with costs.

Mr. McGregor was for the appellant; Mr. Uppington was for the respondent.

Mr. McGregor said the appeal was brought on two grounds: in the first place, that a warranty was given by the defendant that the sheep were free from scab, and, secondly, that the defendant must have been taken as having guaranteed the sheep. He submitted that in this case the scab was patent when the sheep were sold. There was not a title of evidence to show that anyone noticed the scab between the sheep's legs. He submitted that the evidence of the plaintiff was perfectly positive on the point that a guarantee was given by the defendant. This was more particularly the case in reference to the sheep bought by private treaty at the farm. Counsel commented on the fact that the defendant, although warned of the appearance of scab in the sheep bought from him by the plaintiff, ignored the letters sent to him. The evidence showed that in the case of six of the sheep the scab was of some standing. Counsel quoted a number of authorities in support of his contention on the guarantee, mentioning the cases of Redgrave v. Herd (20 Chancery Div., 12), Newbiggen v. Adams (34 Chancery Div., 582). He also quoted Anson (pp. 167-9) and Voet (21, 1, 10).

Without calling upon Mr. Upington, De Villiers, C.J. [After stating the facts.] In my opinion the evidence is not sufficient to prove that the defendant guaranteed the sheep sold privately to be free from scab, and the question remains whether such a guarantee is implied by law. The disease—if it be indeed a morbus—is caused by a minute insect, but the effects are perceptible to the naked eye, and cannot be regarded as latent. According to the Digest (31, 1, 3, and 4), where a slave was suffering from itch or scab, the defect being patent, was held not to entitle the purchaser to the redhibitory action. A fortiori in the case of sheep selected and caught out of a flock by the purchaser himself, it would be impossible to hold that on subsequently discovering that they are suffering from scab, he would be entitled to claim a return of part of the price. The action, however, was for damages on the ground of the expense incurred by the plaintiff in dipping all the sheep bought by him from the defendant. In the absence of any guarantee, express or implied, the defendant cannot be held liable for such damages unless he knew that the sheep were suffering from scab and improperly withheld the information from the plaintiff. The evidence, however, is clear that the scab inspector had pronounced the sheep to be free from scab and that the defendant fully believed that such was the case. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Respondent's Attorneys: Dold and Van Breda.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CIVIL APPEALS.

VERSTER V. FLETCHER. { 1904.
 { Nov. 25th.

Letting and hiring — Waiver —
Restoring premises to former condition.

The plaintiff leased certain premises to the defendant for a term and the defendant undertook to deliver the premises, at the expiration of the term, in like good order and repair. During to the currency of the lease, the Town Council required, as a sanitary measure, in consequence of the plague having broken out, that a cement floor should be substituted for a wooden one, and the defendant, at his own expense and with the knowledge of the plaintiff, made the requisite alterations.

Held, that the defendant was not released, on the expiration of the term, from the obligation of restoring the premises to their former condition.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, the appellant having been sued in the Court below for £15 damages for alleged failure to deliver up a certain shop which he had hired from the respondent Moses Fletcher, in the "like good order and repair" in which he took it over.

From the record, it appeared that the appellant, Verster (managing director of the Federal Cold Storage), had hired the shop at 52, Caledon-street, Cape Town, from Fletcher. The wooden floor of the shop was renewed in the course of the tenancy, in consequence of the regulations of the City Council, and a cement floor was substituted. The appellant carried on a butcher's business at the shop, and the alterations were required by reason of certain trade regulations passed by the City Council. The plaintiff said that it had cost him £15 to restore the shop to the condition in which it was let to the defendant, and he claimed this sum, saying that the alterations were made by the defendant on his own responsibility. The defendant said that the plaintiff assented to the alterations, and he repudiated liability for the present claim. The lease, it seems, was entered into on the 3rd July, 1900, and the tenancy terminated on the 14th July last, the defendant having exercised his option under the lease to extend the tenancy. The plaintiff complained that the cement floor, as left by the defendant, was actually nine inches lower than the level of the wooden floor had been. The defendant had offered to lower the door of the premises, but otherwise he denied all the allegations of the plaintiff.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that with regard to the contentions of the defendant that he was a sub-tenant of the premises, he thought it was now too late to set up such a defence. He considered that the defendant had failed to prove that he was not liable to replace the floor. If there was a definite arrangement absolving him from liability, he would not, he (the Magistrate) thought, have agreed to lower the door to the floor level. In the process of putting the wooden floor down, a sum of £12 10s. 11d. had been fairly expended, and judgment would be given for that sum, with costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Rainsford) for appellant. Mr. Burton for respondent.

Mr. Schreiner: In this matter an unforeseen circumstance occurred and that was that the Town Council ordered a cement floor to be put down. The lessor agreed to the lessee putting in a cement floor at his own expense. But if the plaintiff did not agree to that particular floor there would have been no actual agreement as to the substitution of one floor for another. A lessor is bound to give quiet possession to his tenant and he was therefore bound in this case to put in such a floor as the Town Council required. Vorster would have been entitled to judgment in his favour, and yet after paying £30 for a cement floor the lessor demands £12 from him for a new wooden floor. The lessor promised quiet possession of these premises to be used for the purposes of a butcher's shop.

[Mr. Burton: That nowhere appears on the pleadings.]

It was understood between the parties. Of course the tenant must pay his rent, but the landlord has his obligations also. Here the landlord first allows his tenant to put down a cement floor and then insists on a wooden floor being restored.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The landlord did not contemplate the shop being always used as a butcher's shop. It was the tenant who wanted it for that purpose. Let us suppose that the Town Council had ordered the walls to be lined with tiles.]

That would have been unreasonable, but the regulations as to the floor were not. My point is that both the landlord and the tenant knew that these premises were to be used as a butcher's shop, and the landlord had to make them suitable for that purpose.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then he was bound to provide suitable fittings?]

No, that would have been unreasonable; but it would have been perfectly reasonable that the landlord should have provided a cement floor. However, the tenant does that, and then the landlord insists on his wooden floor being replaced.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court would never have ordered the landlord to put in a cement floor.]

Surely the Court would not have held that had he failed to comply with the Town Council regulations the tenant would be obliged to pay rent for years for premises from which he could derive no benefit.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He might have been justified in abandoning his lease.]

Several reported cases show that he cannot do that. Even if premises are closed on account of plague, the tenant is still liable for rent. De Jong v. Kaplansky (11, C.T.R., 203).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose in that case the tenant had been allowed to carry on his hotel business on condition of certain structural alterations being made, would the landlord have been bound to make them?]

Surely, if they were reasonable—Salisbury Building Co. v. British S.A. Co. (14, C.T.R., 369) shows that if the property leased be destroyed the tenant is not bound to pay rent. The locking up of a place by the local authority is on the same footing with the destruction of the property. Joe v. Mahomet (11, C.T.R., 816). Then the Magistrate is not correct as to his facts. Vorster's offer to lower the door sill was without prejudice and the Magistrate should not have attached so much importance to it. As to the Common Law on the duties of a lessor see Van der Linden (1, 15, 12). Here we could not get quiet possession without making this alteration as to the floor, and we should have been justified in deducting the cost from the rent, see cases cited vol. 2, Nathan's S. African Law, 814, and also Foulger v. ...ermann Bellated and Co. (12, C.T.R., 24).

Mr. Burton was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: The shop in question was let to the defendant for a period of twelve months with an option of renewing the lease for a further period of three years. The last clause of the agreement is as follows: "Upon the expiration of this lease the said lessee undertakes to deliver the premises hereby leased in a like good order and repair as received originally by the S.A. Biograph and Mutoscope Company, reasonable wear and tear alone excepted." It is common cause that the shop was not delivered in like good order, and the only question to be decided is whether there has been any consent or waiver on the part of the plaintiff that it should not be so delivered. In point of fact, considerable alterations were made during the tenancy. There had been a wooden floor; and that floor was converted into a cement floor in consequence of the requirements of the Town Council during the plague period. Now it has been very ingeniously argued by the learned counsel for the appellant that, inasmuch as the lessee was bound to pay the rent, the lessor on his part was bound to make such structural alterations as would enable the lessee to use it for the purpose for which he hired it, namely, as a butcher's shop. But the answer to that argument is that there is nothing in the lease to show that the lessor undertook that these premises should be in a fit state to be used as a butcher's shop. The premises were let and the landlord under the lease took no obligation whatever upon himself to place the premises in such a state as to render them fit for a butcher's shop, consequently the analogy of the roof being destroyed breaks down altogether. The destruction of the roof would prevent the house being used for any purpose, whether for a shop or a habitation; but the requirements of the Town Council did not prevent the use of these premises. The place could still be used; it was habitable. The Salisbury case which has been cited does not apply, because there the premises had ceased to exist altogether. There is only this requirement of the Town Council that it shall not be used as a butcher's shop unless certain alterations are made. If the parties had intended that the lessee should be released from the obligation of restoring the premises to the condition in which he received them, the simplest thing in the world would have been to reduce an agreement to that effect to writing. The lessee did not object to the alterations, which did not prejudice him during the currency of the lease, but he might have reasonably have expected that on the expiration of the lease the premises would be restored to their former condition. He did not want a butcher's shop; he wanted his premises in the condition in which he had let them, and it did not matter to him what was done in the meanwhile. It was to the advantage of the lessee to have a cement floor, and the landlord could not object to that. There is nothing to show that he agreed to the alteration or that he waived his right. The question as to whether there was a verbal agreement was a pure question of fact. There is evidence on either side, but the Magistrate believed the witnesses for the plaintiff, and I see no reason to disturb the decision of the Magistrate on the question of fact, notwithstanding the very ingenious argument of the learned counsel for the appellant. In my opinion there has been no waiver by the plaintiff to insist on the condition which was inserted. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

[Appellant's Attorneys: W. G. Coulton; Respondent's Attorneys: S. J. Mostert and Son.]

KONIGSBERG V. STANISLAUS AND ANOTHER.

Defamation — Summons — Averment of publication.

In a summons for damages for defamation in a Magistrate's Court, it is not a sufficient averment of publication to allege that the defamatory words were contained in a letter written by the defendant addressed to a third person.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Mafeking in a case in which the plaintiff unsuccessfully sued the respondents for defamation of character. The attorney for the respondents excepted to the summons on behalf of the first defendant that the allegation of publication was an essential in the summons. The Court upheld the exception and dismissed the case with costs. The case against the second defendant was then withdrawn. The alleged defamatory words were contained in a letter written by the first defendant and addressed to one Falk Rosenfield, of Mafeking, and which contained the following false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words of and concerning him, the said plaintiff, to wit: "I heard a competent man had come . . . and was staying at the Mafeking Hotel. On making enquiries I was told to apply to you. I did so, not thinking for a moment of Mr. Konigsberg, as it would be very inconsistent to solicit the services of a man whom we dismissed some short time ago for incompetence." The second defendant then caused to be inserted, printed and published, in the issue of the "Mafeking Mail," the following false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words concerning the plaintiff: "Piano Tuning—A thoroughly competent pianoforte tuner is expected to arrive at the convent on Wednesday to do special work. Any persons desirous of availing themselves of his services should send in orders to the 'Mail' office as soon as possible," thereby meaning that the plaintiff was incompetent. Mr. Gardiner (for the appellant) said the point was whether or not the summons sufficiently alleged publication. He submitted that the word "address" meant directly transmitted, in the sense it was used. One did not expect excellent English in the Magistrate's Courts. He submitted the proper course for the Magistrate was to get evidence of publication.

Without calling on Mr. Benjamin (for the respondent),

De Villiers, C.J., said in his opinion the exception was a good one. It is quite consistent with the averments in the summons that the defendant after writing the letter addressed to a third person may have kept it in his pocket without acquainting anyone with its contents. There was no application for an amendment. There was no allegation of publication, and the appeal would be dismissed with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait; Respondent's Attorneys: G. J. O'Reilly.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CIVIL APPEALS.

DE LANGE V. THERON. { 1904.
Nov. 28th.

Cattle — Trespass — Illegal impounding.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Stockenström in an action brought by the respondent in the court below to recover damages for the illegal impounding of his cattle.

The appellant was sued in the Court below for £5 damages by reason of his having unlawfully and wrongfully impounded certain cattle of the respondent. Respondent also claimed 2s. 1d. for an alleged overcharge for trespass, and 6s. 4½d. pound fees. The plaintiff said that on the 15th June he paid under protest 7s. 4½d., for the release of the said cattle. The parties, it appeared, belonged to Balfour, in the district of Stockenström.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said the defendant admitted that the plaintiff paid him 9d. per head, but from the evidence it would appear that 4d. per head was the correct charge. It seemed that the Divisional Council had altered the trespass fees payable. As to the claim of £5 for illegal impounding, he took it that a legal tender was made. The defendant was Mrs. Green's caretaker, and it was upon her land that the cattle were trespassing when the alleged impounding took place. He was perfectly satisfied that a bona fide tender was made by the plaintiff. In regard to the claim in reconvention, one could see at once that it was an impossibility to award any damages, seeing that the defendant nearly a month afterwards had only had the damages assessed, and there was no proof that the damage done was caused by the plaintiff's cattle. Judgment would be given for the plaintiff for £3 8s. 5½d., and the claim in reconvention would be dismissed.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. Upington was for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that there were two trespasses alleged, viz., by three head of cattle on the 15th June last, and by five on the 16th. The more important was the first trespass, because the cattle were then impounded. As to that, the evidence of any tender having been made, depended simply on the statement of a native boy, who said that he tendered the trespass money. An important question in the case was whether the trespass fee payable was 4d. per head, or 9d. The ground trespassed upon was cultivated. He submitted that the land was sufficiently fenced as required by the Act. If the ground had been properly fenced, he contended that the tender of 4d. per head made by the plaintiff was quite insufficient. He submitted that the appellant was entitled to demand 1s. 6d. per head on the assumption that the land was cultivated, and enclosed. If the land had been cultivated, and was not properly fenced, then the defendant was entitled to demand 8d. per head. Counsel intimated that he did not propose to press the claim in reconvention brought by the appellant in the court below. He submitted that as the same cattle trespassed twice within a fortnight, the respondent was entitled to double trespass fees.

Mr. Upington contended that as no notice was given at the time to the plaintiff of the claim for double fees through the same cattle having been twice on the defendant's land the defendant could not now come and say that he was entitled to double fees. Double trespass fees had never previously been demanded, and the sole question had hitherto been whether, the land was enclosed or unenclosed. The defendant, whatever he had hitherto claimed, had only claimed single trespass money. He must be taken to have waived any right to claim double trespass fees. There might have been illegalities on both sides, but the fact remained that the defendant illegally claimed the cattle. Counsel submitted that apart from the sufficiency of the tender, the impounding in itself was illegal, because the cattle were impounded to be released on payment of the fees.

De Villiers, C.J.: It seems a pity there should be any further expense, but I confess I don't see my way clear to do justice in this case without further evidence. Everything depends on the question whether the same cattle had previously trespassed within the farm. If there was trespass, eightpence was payable, and then there was not sufficient tender. The Court will remit the case to the Resident Magistrate for further evidence, whether the three head of cattle impounded on the 15th June, 1904, were the same cattle that trespassed within the place fourteen days previously in terms of the 34th section, of Act 15, of 1892. When that evidence is taken the Court will consider the case without hearing further argument if the point is clear.

Hopley, J., concurred.

LOBASCHER V. MCFARLANE.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Wynberg. The plaintiff sued for £10 damages, by reason of the defendant's breach of contract to lend him £50 on the 26th July, 1904, and the Magistrate gave judgment for £1 17s. interest, the plaintiff to pay the costs of the day, and it was against that order as to costs the appeal was brought. The defendant, on the 26th July, agreed to lend the plaintiff £50, in consideration of a promissory note for £57 10s., payable on the 26th November, 1904; but although the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a promissory note, the defendant failed to pay the £50 on the 26th July, 1904, and only did so on the 22nd August, 1904. Plaintiff contended that if he had had the money, he would have made £10 clear profit on a transaction over certain furniture.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said the plaintiff originally sued the defendant on a dishonoured cheque for £50. On the 26th July, Lobascher went to McFarlane to ask him if he would lend him £50; he said he would make a profit on the transaction, and offered £57 10s., payable at the end of three months. McFarlane gave him a cheque for £50, but subsequently he learnt that Lobascher was on the verge of insolvency, and he foresaw there was scant probability of the note being paid, and he stopped the cheque. Lobascher sued him on the dishonoured cheque, and judgment was given for the full amount. In this case Lobascher claimed £10 as damages for breach of agreement by the defendant, and he based his claim for damages on an estimated profit over a certain transaction, six guineas special fees to his attorney, three guineas loss of his own time, and £1 17s. interest from the time of the promise to the date the money was actually handed over. The only damage awarded to the plaintiff was the loss caused to the plaintiff. Seeing that the defendant had tendered £2, he submitted that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the day.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent.

Counsel contended that the plaintiff was entitled to all the costs of the day. There were no further costs after the time of the tender, and he submitted the Magistrate was wrong in making the plaintiff pay the costs of the day.

Without calling on Mr. Buchanan.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a certain amount of discretion must be left to the Court. As to the question of costs, although the reasons given by the Magistrate might not be perfectly sufficient, yet there appeared to be a sound reason why the plaintiff should not have had his full costs, and he was doubtful whether the plaintiff should have had any costs whatever, seeing that he spent up his action into two cases. When the plaintiff sued the defendant on the cheque, it was quite competent for him to sue the defendant for the damages sustained. On the whole, the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

RUDIGER V. MULLER. { 1904.
{ Nov. 28th.

Bailment—Tender to re-deliver—Consignment—Negligence.

The plaintiff delivered a bicycle to the defendant for the purpose of having it fitted with new tyres. A dispute afterwards arose between them as to whether the plaintiff should pay for the work before or after the tyres had been fitted. The parties not being able to agree, the defendant told the plaintiff to remove the bicycle as it was, but the plaintiff refused to take it without the new tyres. The defendant remained in possession of the bicycle, but on removing to new premises, he left the bicycle on the old premises, to which strangers had access. The bicycle having been removed by one J., the plaintiff sued the defendant. The plaintiff brought an action for damages for non-delivery.

Held, that the offer by the defendant to re-deliver the bicycle did not relieve him from the obligation of taking due care of it.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Britstown, in an action brought by the respondent Muller in the Court below for £5 damages for non-delivery of a bicycle entrusted to the appellant for repairs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he found the following facts proved: That the cycle was duly delivered to the defendant for repairs by Muller junior, the minor son of the plaintiff, that the cycle was received by the defendant and retained in his possession from February, 1903, to March, 1904; and that on removing to his new premises later on the defendant left the cycle in his yard, which was kept closed and locked, and from there it was removed by and went into the possession of one Joubert, in whose possession the cycle still remained. The defendant failed to deliver the cycle upon demand, and he was liable for the value thereof. Judgment would be given for the plaintiff for £5.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; the respondent was not represented.

Mr. Gardiner said that the plaintiff was repeatedly told to take his bicycle away, but he would not. The machine and parts were ready for fixing on one occasion when Muller called, and the latter said he would come with the money on another day, but Muller did not return and claim the cycle. Rudiger had received no money whatever; he had tendered back the machine to the plaintiff. He submitted that Rudiger took the proper course when he tendered the bicycle to Muller.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Had the defendant the right to throw the machine into the street, for instance, if the plaintiff did not come with the money and demand the cycle?]

Mr. Gardiner: He puts it into the possession of the plaintiff by abandoning it. Counsel went on to urge that the plaintiff or his father entered into a contract to pay the cost of repairs upon claiming the machine, and that he failed to fulfil the contract within a reasonable time. The defendant then abandoned possession in the shop.

Hopley, J., put it to counsel what the position of Joubert was. Was he a thief?

Mr. Gardiner said he would not use such a hard term as that, Joubert was a schoolboy.

[De Villiers, C.J., He looked upon it possibly, as derelict.]

Mr. Gardiner was addressing the Court further, when De Villiers, C.J., asked if the appellant tendered the bicycle, with tyres fixed, to the respondent?

Mr. Gardiner: He says he had it ready, but he had not the opportunity to tender because they did not bring the money. Counsel went on to contend that there was no responsibility upon the defendant to deliver the bicycle when the plaintiff or his father failed to claim the machine and pay the cost of repairs within a reasonable period.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff took a bicycle to defendant's place for the purpose of having it fitted with new tyres. The defendant undertook to fit on the new tyres, but a dispute arose between them as to payment. It is quite clear that the defendant was prepared to do the work, but he wanted to be paid for it. The bicycle remained in the possession of the defendant as the lawful custodian, and he was subject to all the obligations of a bailee, and the only question is has anything happened to relieve him from those obligations? Well, the only thing that he relied upon was that the plaintiff called at his premises, and he then told the plaintiff, "You may take the bicycle," but the plaintiff did not take it, and the defendant remained in possession of the bicycle. The mere offer or tender to re-deliver the thing is not sufficient to release the bailee from the obligation to exercise care in the custody of the thing. (See Voet 46, 3, 28). There was nothing in the nature of a consignment to discharge the defendant from that obligation. It is true he himself remained in possession, but he does not pretend to have retained the bicycle as a depository under a consignment. It so happens that this is a bicycle of very little value, but it might have been valuable jewellery, for instance, and under those circumstances, no jeweller would be justified in saying, "I shall leave this jewellery here to be taken away by whoever may." It was clearly the duty of the defendant to take proper care of the bicycle. He did not take proper care of it, he left it on his old premises, and went to his new premises, leaving it to Joubert to take possession. In my opinion, the plaintiff was justified in saying, "I gave it to the defendant, he is the bailee, and I request him to deliver it back to me." The Magistrate was, therefore, in my opinion, right in his judgment, and the appeal must be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SKELTON V. SHELVOKE AND S. 1904.
SMITH. { Nov. 28th.

Surety and principal debtor—
Guarantee—Giving time—
Novation.

The plaintiff obtained judgment in a Magistrate's Court against H. for £60, but a stay of execution was ordered on his undertaking to pay off the debt in monthly instalments of £5, and the defendants guaranteeing the due payment of such instalments. On the debtors failure to pay the first instalment, a decree of civil imprisonment was obtained against him, to be suspended pending payment by him of £1 per month.

Held, in an action against the defendants for the payment of the first instalment of £5 under their guarantee, that they were not discharged by reason of such order suspending execution.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Cape Town, in an action brought by Mrs. Skelton, on behalf of the estate of her late husband, against the two defendants, as sureties for one W. S. Herbert for £5, being an instalment of a debt of £60 due to the estate.

The defendants pleaded that the action was premature, as the principal debtor had not been excused. The Magistrate gave absolution from the instance, with costs, and in his reasons said that the plaintiff, as executrix of her late husband, obtained judgment on the 5th April against Herbert for £60, and there was a stay of execution, on Herbert undertaking to pay £5 a month, and to get a guarantee for the payment of such instalments. On the 25th July Herbert was arrested on a writ of civil imprisonment, and the Court suspended the decree on the payment of £1 per month, and there being no binding obligation on the defendant to pay more than £1 a month, there could be no obligation on the sureties to pay more than that.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin for the respondents.

Mr. Buchanan said that the effect of the Magistrate's ruling was that the original undertaking given by the two sureties was suspended, and he submitted that there he was perfectly wrong. The suspension of the decree of civil imprisonment was merely a personal matter to the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard, De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff obtained judgment against Herbert, the principal debtor, for £60, but a stay of execution was ordered on the debtor's undertaking to pay £5 a month, and to obtain a guarantee from the defendants for the payment of the instalments. On the debtor's failure to pay the first instalment a decree of civil imprisonment was obtained against him, but the Court suspended execution of the decree pending payment by him of £1 per month. The plaintiff then sued the defendants who had signed the guarantee for the payment of the plaintiff of £5 per month until the whole debt should be discharged. The defendants pleaded that the action was premature, inasmuch as the principal debtor had not been excused, but the judgment of the Court below was for the defendants, on the ground that the obligation as sureties had been superseded by the giving of time to the principal debtor. The only sense, however, in which time can be said to have been given to the debtor is that he was not to be imprisoned so long as he paid £1 a month in diminution of the debt. In other respects the debt remained unaltered in quality and quantity, and there was certainly nothing in the nature of a novation in which the defendants as sureties could rely. Even if the transaction could be regarded as a novation, it took place by order of the Court, and apparently not at the desire of the plaintiffs, and it would therefore not extinguish their rights under the guarantee (Foot 46, 2, 1). The transaction was rather in the nature of a rescriptum moratorium granted to the principal debtor which, according to Foot (46, 1, 39) would not absolve the sureties from their obligation under their contract of suretyship. The Magistrate, in my opinion, erred in his judgment, and the appeal must consequently be allowed with costs in the Court below.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorney: C. Brady;
Respondent's Attorney: A. W. Steer.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SABER V. KANSLEY. { 1904.
Nov. 29th.
Dec. 12th.

Agent and principal—Brokerage —Referee

This was an application arising out of an action brought by Alfred Emanuel Saber broker, Cape Town, against Adam Henry Kansley, fish dealer, Cape Town, to recover £466 3s. 1d., balance of account, came on for hearing. The matter, it will be remembered, was of a most complicated character, dealing with transactions between agent and client over a period of two and a half years, and it was remitted by the Court to Mr. Close for report. Counsel for the defendant now moved for judgment on the report.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl), was for the plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. J. Jones) were for the defendant.

This was an action in which the plaintiff claimed £466 3s. 1d., and the defendant in re-convention claimed an account. The declaration stated that the plaintiff was a commission agent and broker, and the defendant was a fish dealer. The plaintiff claimed £466 3s. 1d., with interest and costs, being the balance of account of moneys paid to and for and on behalf of the defendant from October, 1901, to March, 1904, inclusive, in accordance with accounts duly rendered. The defendant denied that anything was due to the plaintiff, and pleaded that he had received no accounts except the last one. He said that in August, 1901, the defendant, who was a wholesale fishmonger, appointed the plaintiff as his agent, and that the latter continued so to act until February, 1904. The plaintiff failed to render an account and the defendant said he was unable to arrive at a true statement of accounts, and he was willing to pay any money found to be due, supported by vouchers. The defendant claimed an account, debate, and judgment for such sum as might be found to be due to him. Sir H. Juta said it would appear that the Kansleys were uneducated people, and they put their money affairs in the hands of the plaintiff, and moneys were paid out by Saber, and moneys were also received by him. The plaintiff, in replication, said that he had rendered accounts from time to time, and these had been approved, and that differences then arose. The matter was, by consent of the parties, referred to an accountant (Mr. Steytler), and in the alternative, to Mr. Close. Mr. Steytler, counsel understood, was unable to accept, and Mr. Close accepted the reference. The matter now came before his lordship upon Mr. Close's report.

In his report Mr. Close said, inter alia: I am not prepared to recommend that such a large amount as these (Saturday bearer) cheques aggregate should be disallowed. I feel convinced that a large portion of them, if not the whole, may have been paid, and had the circumstances surrounding the whole treatment of this account created a more favourable impression on my mind, I might have suggested that they should be passed. I regret, however, to have to report that the books, accounts, and vouchers of the plaintiff have left a most unfavourable impression on my mind. Indeed, the plaintiff's evidence, in my opinion, was considerably tainted, and I found him a most unreliable witness, so much so, that I fear lest any recommendation of mine should, in the absence of facts which may still have to be discovered, benefit him to the disadvantage of the defendant. In the course of further remarks, the referee observed: "The Kansleys are, in my opinion, liable to suffer for such unbusiness-like trust, where money passed so frequently from one to the other—they showed negligence, which weakens their case. As a result of the hearing of the evidence, I cannot but sympathise with them. But what shall be said of the man in whom such trust was reposed, and whose duty it was to be doubly careful, not only to safeguard himself, but those placing such blind faith in him, when we find bearer cheques amounting to several hundreds of pounds unsupported by any voucher to show who received the money? In support of the allegations as to the unreliability of the plaintiff's evidence the referee specially directed attention to the following instances: (1) item 8, £40, fish account, 7th December, 1901; (2) item 11, £100, fish account, 10th January, 1902; (3) item 18, £35 2s. 5d., fish account, 5th July, 1902; (4) item 28, £50, fish account, 17th January, 1903; (5) item 39, £25, Jasio (fish account), 8th June, 1903; (6) item 40, £21 7s. 3d., Thompson Bros., 18th July, 1903. Coming to the credits claimed by Kansley, which had been omitted from the account, the referee said he found here the worst instance of all, viz., credit not given for £61 10s. on the 14th October, 1901. In the cash book he found the following entry: "1901, 14th October, Commission, £61 10s." The report went on: "This had been posted to his commission account, and the Kansleys had accordingly not received credit for it. Had this entry been clearly made there might even then have been some chance of offering an explanation. But I found that there had been a previous entry which had been most carefully erased with a penknife right across the page, so as to leave absolutely no trace of what had been erased. If the previous entry would have led to a correct posting to the Kansleys' account or would have enabled an examining accountant to find that such an amount had not been credited, then the erasure and the subsequent entry was an act of fraud. Saber stated that the writing of the word "commission" over the erasure was not his. I am of opinion that it is his. Even if it is not, he is responsible for the erasure, which was of such a marked nature that no one could miss it in the most casual examination." In regard to an item of £150 alleged to have been received by plaintiff on behalf of the defendant for sale of a business at Maitland, and stated by Saber to have been paid over by him to Kausley, the referee said that the evidence was too conflicting to enable him to come to a conclusion, and he was, therefore, unable to allow the credit claimed. The referee summed up thus: "As a result of the reference proceedings and investigations, I attach an adjustment account marked 'G,' which shows that Saber's claim against Kausley has been reduced from £466 3s. 1d. to £206 19s. 6d. I must, however, ask the Court not to award this amount to Saber for the following reasons: (1) The plaintiff, his account, books, and evidence are wholly unreliable; (2) the seven instances given above, which have come to light, point to my mind to the probability of others not disclosed which might convert Saber's claim into a debt due by him; (3) Saber's treatment of his client and the manner in which he conducted the duties of his fiduciary position seem to me to demand the most ample proof of every payment on his client's behalf. The receipt for £150 (re Fig and Blumberg) bears the mark of Kausley without a witness, and Saber's initials alone are at the foot. The bearer cheques, aggregating over two thousand pounds, may have been for the actual amount paid to Kausley, or they may have included other items. I would therefore recommend the Court to dismiss the claim, with costs against the plaintiff. Counsel for the defendant recommended absolution from the instance in view of my difficulty that, though the payments by bearer cheque were not properly vouched, great injustice might be done to the plaintiff by the disallowing them from the account. But this would involve a position which would be unfair to Kausley by keeping him in fear of a future lawsuit, when plaintiff might be of opinion that he is able to provide further proof. He has had ample opportunity to get that proof, and the matter should, in my opinion, now be closed. As to my recommendation that plaintiff should bear the costs of this case, I think I have furnished very clear reasons for my doing so. Saber alone is really to blame for all the trouble that has been caused. He could have saved it by a proper regard for the trust he held." In closing, Mr. Close recommended that the customary tariff charges should be allowed to the accountant (Mr. Thomas) employed by Kausley, and also to the shorthand writer. Mr. Thomas, he added, "was the means of affording protection to a man who needed it, and his work, which was well done, should be paid for by the plaintiff, whose conduct rendered it necessary."

Sir H. Juta read certain affidavits in regard to the item of £25, Jasio, fish account, June 8, 1903. The plaintiff said that he was ill at the time he made this payment, and he was given a cheque to pay the account by Mrs. Saber. He said that he afterwards gave a cheque to Mrs. Saber. The reference said: "At first blush this seemed a very feasible explanation; but, on subsequently comparing the documents, I find there is a difference of one year and eight days between Mrs. Saber's advance to Saber and his refund to her. Her cheque is dated May 31, 1902, and as the bank "paid" impression was illegible obtained from the Standard Bank the annexed letter dated October 8, 1904, which gives the date of payment as May 31, 1902. This put such a different complexion on the evidence, and the explanation given, that I cannot but believe there is something wrong about the account, and I accordingly disallowed the item. I can only infer that plaintiff, in his desire to get vouchers to fit the cheques, has omitted to notice the year in which the cheques were dated." Counsel read affidavits bearing upon this incident by Mrs. Saber, and Miss Saber, who was employed by her father as his typist. He submitted that the referee had entirely erred in his duties.

Mr. Gardiner read a supplementary report upon the incident by the referee.

Counsel afterwards addressed his lordship upon the report generally.

Mr. Gardiner said that the referee reported that the balance (being the amount to which Saber's claim was reducible, on the evidence before the referee and upon the facts disclosed thereby), was £206 19s. 6d. He recommended, however, that this should not be allowed, because he was not satisfied, on the proof before him, that Saber had expended the moneys alleged to have been expended on the defendant's behalf. Therefore, he (counsel) applied for judgment for the defendant, as recommended by the referee, on the claim in convention. Coming to the claim in re-convention, he said that there arose the question of the "bearer" cheques. The defendant claimed an amount, supported by proper vouchers. The referee said he left it to the Court whether these bearer cheques should be adhered to or not. The cheques were made out, "Pay Kausley, fish account," or "Pay bearer." Nothing appeared in Kausley's writing on the cheques. Certain of them were endorsed by the son, Tom Kausley. Those were admitted. This amount of £2,490 which the referee put in a separate column represented the bearer cheques. Saber was in this position; he was a man trusted to manage the defendant's accounts, he was paid for the work, and it was his duty to keep proper accounts and receipts. The defendant claimed an account duly supported by vouchers, and Saber tendered to give an account duly supported by vouchers. The referee found that these were not proper vouchers. Counsel submitted that, as the plaintiff had failed to supply them with proof, the defendant was entitled to claim the amounts represented by the bearer cheques, and that there was a balance in favour of the defendant of £2,263 2s. He submitted that the defendant was entitled to that amount on the claim in re-convention. If one took away the amount of these suspicious cheques, there was an amount due to the defendant of about £18. Counsel admitted that if the defendant got judgment for £2,286 odd, he would be receiving some money that he had had before. But the plaintiff must suffer for that, it was his own fault. Either the plaintiff must suffer or the defendant must, and if one of two people must suffer, it was the man whose duty it was to keep the account, the man who was the bookkeeper, the broker, the man who was paid for his services.

[Hopley, J.: The accountant finds nothing one way or another on that.]

No; he says they are not properly vouched.

Hopley, J., remarked that the defendant may have been an ignorant man, but still it was partly his fault that things were in such a state.

Sir H. Juta said he thought the referee had entirely mistaken what the duties of a referee were. Instead of acting as a sort of legal assessor, recommending to his lordship what kind of judgment should be given, or how his lordship should exercise his judicial discretion as to costs, he had cast rather broadcast insinuations. The duty of a referee was to find facts. Here was an action of account, one of the parties claimed balance of an account, and the other party said, "You have not rendered an account, render an account, let us debate it, and, whoever is found to have a balance against him, he must pay it." That was what they wanted; they wanted Mr. Close, the referee, to find on whose side was the balance, and they were months after, according to his learned friend, no further than when his lordship referred the matter. The referee, according to his learned friend, found nothing. To whom was the money due?

[Hopley, J.: He states that the affairs are in such a position that no man on earth could find anything, except absolution from the instance. Can you blame the referee for not coming to a positive conclusion, when you cannot suggest any way now of coming to a conclusion?]

Oh, yes, I can. The simple remedy is to find what the facts are; the same as the Court has to do. Supposing we had not gone to a referee, your lordship would have found one way or another. The referee must find one way or another. The facts must be found; it does not help your lordship to say: "I don't know what the facts are." Your lordship has not heard the witnesses; surely the referee must say: "I believe this, or I don't believe it." He says he believes a large amount has been paid. So it has; it has been proved up to the hilt. There was Muller, for instance, who spoke to having received large amounts from Saber on account of fish. It was all very well to say that Kansley was an illiterate man, but he did not run the business. His wife could both read and write. Then, curiously enough, nothing was said in the report about his son, Tom Kansley. Tom Kansley had kept books. There were two witnesses who spoke to having seen certain books, which were not produced at the hearing. Tom Kansley said that he kept pocket-books, but not one was produced.

Hopley, J., remarked that the cheques were made to "order" or "bearer," and the plaintiff might himself have drawn the amounts.

Sir H. Juta said that there was plenty of evidence to show that a large sum of money was received by Kansleys on those "bearer" cheques. It was all very well to say that the fault was the plaintiff's. But here they had people who could read and write and keep books, and yet no books were produced. It was no use trying to throw the blame upon any particular person, and saying that the plaintiff ought to have had vouchers and everything else, whereas the people themselves, not being illiterate, could easily have kept their own books, and did, in fact, keep books. This young man, Tom Kansley, had had most to do with the books and money. Curiously enough, on that part of the case, the report of the referee was absolutely silent. Counsel confessed that he could not understand the report. The referee said that the balance, reducible on the evidence before him and upon the facts disclosed thereby, was £206 19s. 6d. If his report did not mean that that was the balance due to the plaintiff, then the whole of the reference was nothing, and it must go back to somebody who would find facts. Counsel discussed the referee's reasons for recommending that the claim should be dismissed, and contended that the referee had not adopted a fair method of putting things. His submission was that this was not a final report, that there were no findings of fact, and that his lordship was not in a position to give judgment. He contended that the referee, with all respect to him, had entirely failed in grasping what the duties of a referee were in such an action. The whole point in dispute was this question of bearer cheques. The plaintiff could not supply more vouchers; there were none, and the question was: how much of this amount had Kamsley received and how much had he not received? He submitted that no judgment could be given on this report of the referee's, and that the only solution of the matter was that the question of the bearer cheques should be referred back to some one to find one way or the other. In regard to the costs, he contended that the ordinary rule should apply.

Mr. Gardiner pointed out, in reply, that it was the duty of the referee to report to his lordship, and he had given the Court his opinion of the evidence, but when it came to a question as to what conclusion it led to in law he left it to the Court. There was argument about a book missing that had been kept by Tom Kamsley, but where was the missing ledger kept by Saber, who was a competent bookkeeper? Saber could give no explanation of the alteration in the folios, and Harrison had said that it was Saber's handwriting. Counsel submitted, if there were missing books, they were missing on both sides, and as to the question of the erasure, Saber no doubt never dreamt of the case coming into court. The referee had piles of evidence in Saber's handwriting to be convinced that the alteration over the erasure was his. If the suspicious cheques were disallowed there would still be a balance for the defendant for £18. Surely, after such scandalous dealings on the part of Saber, the alteration of vouchers and the reckless way of putting them in, costs should not be allowed to the plaintiff.

Sir H. Juta said his lordship would see that the ledger ran on quite in order, and if there was a mistake he would suggest that it occurred through taking a page of the cash-book into the ledger, in which the items were posted. If there had been any attempt at fraud, the simplest thing in the world would have been to put holes through the files of accounts.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (December 12th).

Hopley, J.: I have endeavoured by looking through the mass of papers connected with this matter, to see if I could come to any definite conclusions, but find myself at a loss, and, as at present advised, must confess my inability to do so. Since the referee's report, further evidence has been tendered on behalf of the plaintiff, and embodied in affidavits which, with accompanying annexures, have been laid before me, and in answer to these the referee has made a further report; but I feel that it would be more satisfactory if the referee were again to go into the matter and personally examine the witnesses, and any further evidence which the parties may wish to adduce. The referee has had a difficult and arduous task, and it is possible that the further consideration of the questions at issue may present further difficulties; but it is obvious that he, who has had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses, is the proper person to arrive at such results as, in his opinion, the whole of the evidence warrants. He seems to have taken great pains, and to have done his best to elucidate matters, and I have no doubt that he will approach the matter in a judicial spirit, and come to a conclusion, or such conclusions as are possible in view of and with due consideration of any new facts and any new arguments which may be laid before him. When he has duly weighed everything which the parties can lay before him it will be necessary for him to arrive at such results as he feels enabled to do, and to report finally to the Court the conclusions he has come to, as regards the due adjustment of the figures, and the amounts in dispute between the parties. The matter is remitted to him for such further report. The question of costs he may leave to be dealt with by the Court.

Mr. Gardiner asked his lordship if he could give some direction as to the lines on which further evidence should be taken?

Hopley, J., said that the referee could inform counsel upon what points he had made up his mind, and he could direct counsel on what points his mind was settled. He could not come to any conclusion upon the referee's report. He would rather that the referee came to a final, definite final report, of which he could make use.

Postea (March 9th, 1905).

Sir H. Juta moved for judgment in terms of a recommendation in the referee's report for the plaintiff for £206 18s. 6d., on a debated account between the parties.

Hopley, J. said, when he last sent back the papers, as far as he could make out, the main cause of his embarrassment was that he did not get before him the ledgers and the books, so that he could not quite understand the comments of Mr. Close on the matter. He had since looked into these books, and he must say that they did not show at all favourable to Mr. Saber in his dealings with these ignorant people. Personally, he felt the greatest difficulty, after looking into these books, in concluding that there was this sum owing to the plaintiff.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J.: I don't think the parties in this case can complain of the zeal on the part of their advocates in their endeavours to clear up the case to the referee and to this Court. The plaintiff should certainly have kept a proper account of his client's money. We find that he immediately put all money he received for his client into his own banking account, and frequently used such funds for his own purposes, as the books will show. He speculated in shares, and drew the money from the same fund. He simply wrote out bearer cheques, which convey nothing to anybody who has to investigate the case. These bearer cheques might have been for his client, or they might have been for himself. The referee, who has had a very troublesome task in the matter, after taking the greatest care, seems to have arrived at something like a fair result between the parties. If he has failed, it is because of the course pursued by the plaintiff in this case, who had the whole conduct of the business in his hands. The books were kept in a very slovenly and reprehensible manner. There are erasures and alterations which make me feel inclined to endorse the words of Mr. Gardiner that they were kept in a disgraceful fashion. In regard to the claim, I don't wonder that the referee should have been unable to make up his mind whether to allow or disallow these amounts. I would not have quarrelled with the referee if he had disallowed entirely these suspicious items in the account. The referee is unable to make up his mind, and as the Court has got to lean on him, there will be absolution from the instance, with costs. The plaintiff being responsible for the whole of these proceedings, will be ordered to pay the costs of this action. The referee's remuneration will be fixed at 80 guineas.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissanè; Defendant's Attorneys: Harsant and Harsant.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. ENDRIES. { 1904.
{ Nov. 30th.

Brothel—Landlord—Knowledge
—Act 36 of 1902.

The appellant was the lessor of a house, the lessee of which was convicted of keeping a brothel therein. Notice of this conviction was given by the police to the defendant, and he was warned that if the house should continue to be used as a brothel he would be prosecuted for a contravention of the 24th section of Act 36 of 1902. The appellant took no notice of the warning; and the house continued to be used as a brothel. Held, that there was sufficient proof of knowledge on the defendant's part to support a conviction of keeping a brothel after such notice.

This was an appeal brought by Ismail Endries, who had been convicted of brothel keeping at 76, Commercial-street, Cape Town, and sentenced to a fine of £100, or in default three months' imprisonment, with hard labour. The prosecution was brought under the Act 36 of 1902 (section 22).

The record showed that the defendant lived at Kimberley, and was a Malay. The police had watched the place, and had seen it used as a brothel. The defendant denied any knowledge that the place had been used, or was being used for that purpose. He admitted that the rent was £18 a month, and that the house contained five rooms.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Maasdorp, J., enquired how long the lease was for.

Mr. Gardiner said that the defendant let the house to one Cohen, on the 1st April, 1904, for twelve months. In argument, counsel said that the charge alleged that the accused, during the past six months, and at or near Cape Town, did keep a brothel, etc. The notice was served by the police upon the accused on the 7th June last, and counsel took it that it would not be necessary to deal with evidence referring to prior to that date. He would take the evidence in so far as the alleged brothel-keeping took place, after the service of notice. He submitted that there was no evidence that the rent, as compared with other rents in the neighbourhood, was excessive. There was evidence that the rent was £18, but no evidence had been led to show what the rents of other houses in the street or neighbourhood were. The accused had all the time been in Kimberley, while this house was in Cape Town. The first two convictions from the house were on the 7th May and the 7th June. Then there was a conviction in August, but this time the woman prosecuted was quite a different person. Counsel also pointed out that Endries received no rent, and that, as a matter of fact, the lease was in the name of his mother-in-law. It was quite evident that there had been a change of the women in the house. Under all the circumstances, he submitted that the Crown had not discharged the onus of proving knowledge by the appellant. After receiving the police notice, the accused wrote to Cohen, calling his attention to the complaint, but he said he received no reply. The accused might have been careless, but it had not been shown that he had knowledge of the purposes for which the house was being used.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones,

De Villiers, C.J.: The 24th section of the Act 36 of 1902 enacts that the following persons shall be deemed to be keepers of a brothel, viz., (c) Any person who, being the lessor or the lessor or landlord, or owner, of any such house, room, or premises, or the agent of such lessor or landlord, lets the same or any part thereof, or allows the same or any part thereof to be let, or to continue to be let, with the knowledge that such premises or part thereof, are, or is to be used, or are or is being used as a brothel." I quite agree with Mr. Gardiner that the prosecution must prove knowledge, and the question is whether there is sufficient proof adduced in the present case. The Court has, in all similar cases, attached considerable importance to a notice being given by the police to the landlord as to prosecutions and convictions, for keeping the house as a brothel. Accordingly, we find that in the present case a notice was given on the 3rd June, 1904, to the appellant in the following terms: "Sir,—In inviting your attention to the appended copy of sections 22 and 24 of Act 36 of 1902, having reference to the keeping of brothels, I beg to inform you that the occupier of house, 76, Commercial-street, Cape Town, has been convicted under the said Act of keeping a brothel therein, and to warn you that should the house in question continue to be kept or conducted as a brothel, proceedings will be instituted against yourself as agent or landlord, and thus keeper of the said brothel." Then the section, of which I have read a portion, is reproduced in full in this notice. The appellant had, therefore, full notice of the conviction, and he had clear warning that if this continued he would be prosecuted. Now what does he do upon that? His evidence is that he wrote to Cohen, to whom he is supposed to have let the house: "I wrote to Cohen a few days later about the complaint, but I got no reply." He does not say what he wrote; he may have written anything for aught we know. He may have told Cohen to take care that these premises were conducted in such a manner that the police could not discover for what purpose they were being used. And further on, he says that, besides writing the letter, he made other inquiries about the house. Well, in my opinion, it is clear that, after receiving the notice, it was his duty to take active steps to prevent the further use of the house as a brothel, and as he did not take such steps it may fairly be presumed that he did not object to such use. According to the police it was patent to everyone that the place was being used as a brothel, and within two months of the notice being served, there was actually a conviction of a woman named Deschamps. In my opinion, there is sufficient evidence of knowledge in this case to justify the decision of the Magistrate. The appeal must be dismissed.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

REX V. BLOEM.

{ 1904.
{ Nov. 30th.

Witness—Committal for contempt —Hard labour.

Where a person duly summoned to give evidence in a criminal case before a Resident Magistrate fails to attend without any lawful excuse allowed by the Court, and having been fined in the sum of £5, admits his inability to pay the fine, the Court may commit him to gaol under Ordinance 6 of 1839, but no hard labour can be imposed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Cape Town, in which the accused was sentenced to pay a fine of £25, or undergo seven days' imprisonment, with hard labour, for failing to attend the Court after being duly summoned. The accused stated she was unable to pay the fine. The appeal was brought on the ground that the alternative sentence of imprisonment was contrary to the law, and could not be supported. Mr. Rainford (for the appellant) contended that under Act 20 of 1856, or the Rule of Court, the Magistrate had no power to impose the alternative sentence of seven days' imprisonment, with hard labour. The Magistrate was, in any case, clearly wrong to impose hard labour. His proper course was to endeavour to levy the fine in the ordinary way. The accused stated that she was unable to pay the fine, but the Magistrate, counsel submitted, should have asked her if she had any goods sufficient to meet the fine.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do you say on the question of hard labour, Mr. Jones?]

Mr. Jones (for the Crown): I admit there is no authority for the hard labour my lord. Continuing, counsel said the imprisonment was quite in order, under the Ordinance of 1839, or under the 13th rule of Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: The appellant was found guilty of non-attendance after being duly summoned, and she was sentenced to pay a fine of £5. The Record adds: "The accused states that she is unable to pay the fine," and thereupon the Magistrate sentenced her to seven days' imprisonment, with hard labour. The 75th Rule of the Magistrate's Court authorises the Magistrate to impose on the offender the same fine as is provided for in such default in civil cases. In civil cases the Magistrate may sentence a defaulter to pay a fine of £5, and for non-payment, may commit such person to the gaol for any time not exceeding fourteen days. The 75th Rule, however, refers only to the fine, and not to the alternative of imprisonment, and therefore if the Court had the power of imprisonment it was under Ordinance 6 of 1839. Under that statute, however, there must be a levy in execution for the fine unless the Magistrate is satisfied that the offender had not sufficient goods and chattels. In the present case the appellant confessed her inability to pay the fine, and the Magistrate was justified in committing her to gaol for seven days. He ended, however, in ordering hard labour, and the sentence must be amended by striking out that portion of the sentence.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorney: W. G. Coulton.]

REX V. HAYES.

} 1904.
} Nov. 30th.

Native Territories Penal Code—
Fraud—False pretences.

The appellant was charged with a contravention of the 196th section of the Native Territories Penal Code, 1886, and the fraud relied upon was the giving of cheques on a Bank in which he had not sufficient funds. It appeared, however, that he had made arrangements before giving the cheques for the sale of some property, which afterwards fell through, but which at the time he believed would enable him to supply the necessary funds to the Bank in time to meet the cheques when presented.

Held on appeal against the conviction, that there was not sufficient proof of fraud to justify a conviction under the 196th section, which applies to fraud, not amounting to a false pretence.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Maclear, in which the accused was convicted and sentenced on two counts to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour for obtaining credit by fraud, under section 196 of Act 24 of 1866. The 196th section reads as follows: "Whoever obtains any money, or things, or who, incurring any debt or liability, obtains credit by means of any fraud, though not amounting to a false pretence hereinbefore defined, may be punished with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term which may extend to one year, or a fine, or both." The indictment set out that about December, 1903, at or near Northbrooke, in the district of Maclear, the said Hayes wrongfully gave out to one Botha, a certain cheque for £356 10s., drawn on the Cala branch of the Standard Bank, as a good and valuable cheque, and stated that there were funds at the bank to meet the cheque, or he would at his option change it at a later date for cash, and he did there and then, and by means of false pretences, induce Botha to sell to him 380 sheep, and to accept the cheque as part payment; whereas, in truth and fact, Hayes well knew that the cheque was not a good one, and that he had no funds, or insufficient funds, to meet it, and that it would not be paid on presentation." The cheque was dishonoured, and although Botha obtained judgment for the amount, he had not yet received any money. The second charge was similar to the first, except that the amount was £306 for eighteen oxen, sold by one Poultney, and the accused stated that he would cash the cheque, if necessary, in eight days. Mr. W. P. Buchanan (for the appellant) said the question was whether the accused obtained these things by a fraud, though not amounting to false pretences. The evidence showed that the accused had farms and other goods and stock, and the point was whether the magistrate was justified in finding that he committed a fraud. In Poultney's case, a writ of execution was issued, and £148 was recovered, and if it was a fraud, the complainant had done an act which amounted to condonation of the offence; and in Botha's case, there were cross accounts running at the time. Counsel submitted that at the time the appellant made the promise to pay afterwards. He did not make it fraudulently. He contended that the telegrams that had passed showed that the appellant had acted bona fide in the matter. He admitted that the appellant had only himself to blame for the position that he was in, but dark as his conduct afterwards might appear, the question was really whether he did intend to defraud these people at the time. The magistrate seemed to have gone solely on the fact of this giving of cheques at a time when he had no funds at the bank. The man might have been perfectly honest at the time he entered into the contract, and afterwards, with the fall of prices, he might have been unable to carry out his contract. When he bought the oxen, he believed that he had a purchaser at a price that would leave him a good profit, and afterwards he found that he could not pay, the sale having failed to go through. The whole question, he urged, was whether the inability of the appellant, on account of the stress of circumstances subsequently, to carry out his contract, amounted to fraud. That was what the Magistrate seemed to have held. Counsel also pointed out that the appellant actually had farms when he was alleged to have committed the fraud.

Mr. Howel Jones (for the Crown) submitted that it was clear that the appellant had brought himself within the 196th section. The appellant said: "If you will send the cheque to the bank at Cala, you will find the money." The money was not there. Beyond the mere statement of Hayes, there was nothing to show that he was intending to sell the cattle to Hill, and that he was expecting to get the money. He thought it was very unfortunate that they had not the assistance of the Magistrate's reasons for judgment. In the absence of the reasons, they could only assume that the Magistrate could not accept the version given by the accused.

Mr. Buchanan, in reply, pointed out that Poultney had said that the appellant asked him if he would wait eight days, and then he would call at a farm and bring the cash, so that he got the cheque on the understanding that he would get the cash in eight days.

De Villiers, C.J.: There are two counts in the indictment against the accused. In the one, he is charged with having falsely and fraudulently given out and pretended to one Botha that a certain cheque, to the value of £356, was a good cheque, whereas in point of fact there was no money to meet it, and on the second count in almost similar terms, only that the amount is different, being a cheque for £306 that was given to Poultney. In both cases strangely enough, the accused is charged with contravening the 196th Section of the Native Territories Penal Code. The 196 section reads as follows: "Whoever obtains any money or things, or who incurring any debt or liability obtains credit by means of any fraud, though not amounting to a false pretence hereinbefore defined, may be punished with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term which may extend to one year, or a fine, or both." This section clearly should be applied only to a case of obtaining money or things by fraud, in which there is no proof of false pretences, because if the fraud amounts to a false pretence the 192nd section would apply. The framers of the indictment must have assumed that the accused was guilty of some fraud, not amounting to a false pretence. As I read the evidence however, there could have been no fraud if there was no false pretence. The fraud is alleged to have consisted in the statement that the accused had funds to meet the cheques which he gave. In the case of Botha no such statement was made by the accused, and in the case of Poultney such a statement was indeed made, but a week's time was subsequently given to the accused to pay the price of the cattle. Although the accused had not sufficient funds in the bank at the time, he gave the cheques, he seems to have been fully convinced that by the time the cheques were presented, the money would be there. In neither case does there appear to me to have been sufficient proof of fraud to justify a conviction under the 196th section. The appeal must therefore be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

APPEALS.

REX V. DU TOIT.

{ 1904.
{ Dec. 1st.

This was an appeal from the R.M. of Cape Town.

From the record in the Court below, it appeared that the appellant was charged with contravening the Liquor Laws. Appellant was the holder of the licence at the Bricklayers' Arms, in Waterkant street. One condition of the licence was that no liquor should be sold to any aboriginal native without a permit signed by the Resident Magistrate, a medical practitioner, or some other person in authority. Appellant was charged with selling one bottle of Cape beer, valued 4d., to two natives without the latter having produced the required permit. Appellant pleaded not guilty, and he was convicted and fined £3. The appeal was based on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support the conviction, and that the Court, holding that the permit produced was not a permit in accordance with the requirements of the law, because it had not written on it the signature of the person giving the same, was not in accordance with fact.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

After hearing Mr. Gardiner on the facts, and without calling on Mr. Howel Jones,

Mr. Justice Maasdorp said it had been proved that the appellant sold liquor to the natives in question without a permit being produced by them signed by any of the persons specified in the conditions by which the licence was held. The appeal would be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. TORR.

Act 5 of 1890—Adulteration.

The appellant had been charged in the Court below with selling adulterated vinegar. A small label on the cask from which the vinegar was drawn stated that it was "an artificially prepared fluid."

Held, that by reason of the small and inconspicuous type in which this notice was printed, the vendor was not exempted from prosecution under Act 5 of 1890.

This was an appeal against a conviction of the R.M. of Komghe for an alleged contravention of section 6. of the Food and Drugs Act, Act 5 of 1890. The appellant was a European storekeeper, and he was charged that on July 2, 1904, with wrongfully and to the prejudice of the purchaser, selling a quart bottle of malt vinegar drawn from the cask, which was not of the substance and quality demanded by the purchaser. The appeal was based on the grounds that there was no prejudice to the purchaser, and that from the label the fact was disclosed to the purchaser that it was an artificially prepared fluid, and that it was not a genuine vinegar.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Without calling on Mr. Jones,

Maasdorp, J., dismissed the appeal, and in doing so held that the smaller type was not of such a description as to prevent deception. He took the same view as the Magistrate, that the label conveyed the idea that the purchaser was getting pure malt vinegar, which was the article asked for. It was not necessary under the section to find that there was an actual attempt on the part of the seller to deceive.

Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

DU PREEZ V. STOMAN.

Principal and agent.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Prieska.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that plaintiff (now appellant) had sued for £1 for work done and labour done at the special instance and request of the defendant. The plaintiff, in his evidence, said defendant asked him to do certain work (to take four donkeys out of the Orange River), for which he undertook to pay £1. He (plaintiff) instructed his servants to do the work, and they accordingly did it. Subsequently, defendant took up the position that another man named Lootz was responsible for payment for the service. According to the evidence, Lootz offered one of the plaintiff's servants a goat by way of payment for the work. The case for the defence was that the work was performed on behalf of the man Lootz, who employed defendant and instructed him to get men to get the donkeys out of the river. Lootz stated in evidence that Stoman was responsible to him for the safe delivery of the donkeys, and that he did not give Stoman orders to employ men. The Magistrate found for the defendant, with costs, being of opinion that defendant was Lootz's servant, and that Stoman was authorised to get help. He considered Lootz had told deliberate untruths in order to escape liability.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the appellant; there was no appearance on behalf of the respondent.

Maasdorp, J., in giving judgment, said that in the court below the plaintiff sued for the recovery of £1 for services rendered, and the defendant denied that the debt was due, and further alleged that in the transaction which he entered into with the plaintiff, he acted as agent for a man called Lootz, and that Lootz was really the debtor in this matter. The Magistrate was correct in his statements of the points upon which he found in this case. The Magistrate said that the defendant was a servant employed by Lootz to drive his wagon and fetch his family and trek, and the points for decision were: Defendant was authorised by his employer Lootz to obtain assistance to rescue these donkeys, and did the defendant, when he engaged assistance, make it clear that he was doing so on behalf of his employer? Both these points were decided by the Magistrate in the affirmative, and judgment was given for the defendant, with costs. He (the learned judge) thought there was abundant evidence to justify the Magistrate in his finding that the defendant was dealing with the plaintiff as Lootz's agent, and that the plaintiff was aware of this, and consequently could not hold the defendant personally liable. The appeal must be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

PEVERETT V. GOVA.

Wood-cutting—Power of forest officer.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Engcobo, in a case in which the appellant sued the respondent for £23 12s., damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the wrongful act of the defendant. In his summons, the plaintiff stated that on the 4th July he procured a permit to cut a wagon-load of wood in the district of Ingava. He proceeded to cut wood, but was prevented from doing so by defendant. Defendant pleaded that he was a duly appointed headman and a forest officer within the meaning of the Proclamation. Acting on instructions received from a superior officer, he prevented the plaintiff from cutting wood in a specially-preserved part of the forest, but pointed out another spot where plaintiff might cut wood. The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, with costs. In his reasons, he stated that he found that the defendant was a forest officer, and acting as such and under the instructions of his superior, he was justified in preventing the plaintiff from cutting down wood in the reserved patch; and having acted in good faith, no prosecution could lie against him. The Magistrate further found that the permit given to the plaintiff to cut wood was subject to conditions, one of which was that he should not cut in the reserved patch.

Mr. Gardiner for appellant.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the respondent.

After hearing Mr. Gardiner, and without calling upon Mr. Buchanan, the Court dismissed the appeal.

Maasdorp, J.: The case of the plaintiff amounts in substance to this: that he received a permit from the forester to cut firewood in a certain forest, and he thereupon proceeded to procure this firewood. Upon arrival at the forest, he says he was prevented from cutting this firewood, and in consequence of the wrongful act of the defendant in preventing him from taking the firewood, he suffered damages. It appears from the evidence that a permit was given by the forester to the plaintiff, and upon arriving at the forest and preparing to cut wood there, he was told by the forest officer in charge of the forest that he should confine his operations to a certain portion of the forest, or, rather, that he should not interfere with a certain part of the forest, which the officer had been instructed was to be preserved. It seems that this officer was the defendant, and he had received instructions from Human, the chief forester, who gave this permit, that no cutting was to be allowed to take place in this particular part. Now, it is quite clear that these permits must be subject to the instructions given to the forest officers for the protection of the forest, and that some authority must be reserved to these officers, in order to ensure that no damage is done to the forest. These instructions, we are told by the forester, were given by him to the defendant, and he (the forester) also says that the defendant, in excluding the plaintiff from the particular part of the forest where he desired to cut, was only doing his duty and carrying out his instructions. Consequently no wrong was done by the defendant to the plaintiff, and further than that, it would have been difficult, even if there was some slight prejudice in not allowing the plaintiff to cut wood in that particular part of the forest, for him to prove that he had sustained any damage at all, because there was a sufficiently large portion of the forest available to him. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

REX V. JOE LIS.

This was an appeal from a certain judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town in a case in which the appellant was charged with contraventions of certain sections of the Act of 1902, in that during the past three years he knowingly lived wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution, and, alternatively, that he kept certain brothels. He was convicted on the charge of having kept brothels, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. The grounds of appeal were that the summons was vague and embarrassing, and bad in law, and that certain evidence was illegally admitted.

Mr. Gardiner (instructed by Mr. W. G. Coulton) appeared for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner read the record of evidence, which was very voluminous. The first point of objection was with regard to the admission of an affidavit made by one Bernstein, who gave evidence for the prosecution, and whom the Magistrate granted leave to the Public Prosecutor to treat as a hostile witness. Bernstein stated in his evidence that certain statements made in the affidavits were not correct. Witnesses gave evidence as to the connection of accused with brothels at Bloemfontein, and to the admissibility of this objection was also taken. Records were put in showing convictions against Lis (alias Silver) for assault at Bloemfontein, and for assisting in the management of a brothel there, while the evidence was adduced of a Kimberley police officer, who deposed that the defendant used to associate with thieves in Kimberley, and lived at a brothel.

Mr. Gardiner, in argument, contended that the parts of the record referred to were illegally admitted as evidence. This illegal evidence must, he submitted, have influenced the Magistrate to some extent, and throwing aside this evidence he urged that there was insufficient evidence to justify a conviction. Apart from this there were only the statements of a police spy, which were wholly uncorroborated in the material points. Counsel submitted that there had been so much prejudice in the case that prisoner ought to have been given the benefit of the doubt, and the conviction ought to be quashed.

Mr. Jones urged that the evidence complained of as being illegal was necessary in order to show guilty knowledge on the part of the accused.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp: How do his acts at Kimberley and Bloemfontein help you to show that he knew these places down here to be brothels?

Mr. Jones said that it might be the case that a man would profess not to know these places were brothels, and in that case the evidence that he had been associated with brothels elsewhere would be of value, and would be admissible as showing that he had knowledge that these places were brothels.

Mr. Justice Hopley: Take a case where knowledge is the essence of the crime—the case of a man charged with receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. Would you be permitted to bring evidence showing that he had received stolen goods in Kimberley, in Bloemfontein, in Johannesburg, and Natal?

Mr. Jones: I submit it would as a fact showing a system.

Mr. Justice Hopley: You would not be allowed to bring such evidence. Any judge would stop you.

Mr. Jones cited Archbold's Criminal Practice (p. 353, 32nd edit.) and the judgment of Coleridge, L.J., in Reg. v. Francis (12 Cox, 612) on the point of the admissibility of evidence showing knowledge. A man could not be convicted on such evidence, but he urged that it was admissible.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp said the question was whether there was not sufficient evidence without this evidence complained of as being illegal.

Mr. Jones contended that there was ample evidence independently of this to justify the Magistrate in his finding.

Maasdorp, J.: The accused was charged with contravening section 22 of Act 36 of 1902, "in that he, during the past eight months, and at Cape Town, wrongfully and unlawfully kept certain brothels at No. 9, Sydney-street, and 28, Longmarket-street, at Cape Town aforesaid." He was found guilty upon this charge, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. A good deal of evidence was taken in this case, and there can be no doubt that a large portion of it was wholly illegal. I refer to the evidence which dealt with the previous bad character of the accused and with allegations that he had been guilty of similar criminal conduct on previous occasions, and also that he had been prosecuted for such criminal conduct. There can be no doubt that this evidence was irregular; that it was altogether illegal, and should not have been admitted, and if it now appeared to the Court that it was of such a character, irrespective of the other admissible evidence, that it must have weighed largely with the Magistrate in his decision of the case, then I think the Court would have been bound to quash the conviction as being founded upon illegal and inadmissible evidence. Although there is a large amount of this evidence, still it seems to a great extent similar in its nature, and it does not strike me that it was prejudicial to the prisoner's case from different sides, because, as I say, it dealt almost solely with his previous bad character. Now, upon reference to the other admissible evidence, it would seem that there is very strong and clear evidence in the case pointing at the guilt of the accused. Now the question is whether, in our opinion, that evidence is so clear and so strong that the Magistrate would have founded a conviction upon it if he had not taken the other inadmissible evidence. Upon referring to the evidence of Levi, we have a very detailed statement of an interview which Levi had with the accused in July last, when negotiations took place between them for the sale of this property. It seems that they visited both places, where it is alleged that brothels were carried on—No. 9 in Sydney-street, and No. 28 in Longmarket-street—and there the accused pointed out to Levi the advantages possessed by these places for the business of ill-fame, which was then being practised there. He accompanied Levi to the house No. 9 in Sydney-street, and there pointed out to him the adaptability of the place for the business, showing him the safeguards, which had evidently been put up to meet any attempts at detection that the police might make, in the shape of a peep-hole, which was found in the door, and bars which were put up to keep out any unruly people who might try to get into the place, and when he was asked by Levi what he would charge for the property he said it could be had for £1,300. From this place, they proceeded to No. 28 in Longmarket-street, and there, it appeared, a conversation took place with some of the women in the place, who were evidently prostitutes, in the course of which the accused pointed out to Levi, from statements made by these women, how fond they were of their landlord, indicating himself. Consequently, he dealt with this property in July as his own, as at his disposal, and he called himself the landlord with respect to the property, No. 28, Longmarket-street. At this period the defendant says that the properties had already been disposed of, and that in July they were transferred to a Miss Lemont and a Mr. Cohen. He was unable to put the police on the track of these people, and he seemed to be wholly ignorant of their whereabouts, and I think the tendency of the evidence is to prove that this pretended sale in June was entirely a sham. Now, if the Magistrate believed the evidence of Levi, then in July this place was kept as a brothel to the knowledge of the accused. But the evidence of Levi was corroborated, first by a witness called on behalf of the defence, who says he was present when the negotiations were started in respect of the sale of this property in July, and, although he was unable to say to what property the conversation that then took place referred, it is clear it is a corroboration of the statement of Levi that they were actually negotiating with reference to the purchase of these very properties. Then Davis, the detective, who seems to have watched these places for some time, says they were carried on as brothels from last April to August, and that on one occasion the accused spoke to him of the police watching these places, and pointed out to him that these brothels were carried on in a very respectable manner. All this evidence proves clearly that there was knowledge on the part of the accused that brothels were being carried on at these places. There being this what appears to me to be very clear and strong evidence that the places were used as brothels, that the defendant had knowledge that they were so used, and that he himself was virtually the owner and landlord of these premises, it seems to me that the evidence supporting the conviction by the Magistrate is so strong that I cannot feel any doubt that he would have come to that conclusion without being swayed by such evidence as has been held to be illegal in this matter. The appeal must be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

REX V. COHEN.

{ 1904.
Dec. 2nd.

Liquor licence—Transfer—Agent.

A bottle licence was granted to S., who transferred it to F., but the Licensing Court refused to ratify the transfer. F. transferred the licence to the appellant, who obtained no ratification of such transfer and did not obtain a bottle licence for himself but continued to sell liquors on his own behalf.

Held, that he was properly convicted of selling liquor without a licence.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. The appellant, Herman Cohen, had been convicted in the court below of contravening section 75 of Act 28 of 1883, and the liquor laws of 1888 and 1904, in that "upon or between the 7th March and 20th August, 1904, the said Cohen did wrongfully and unlawfully and without a licence on that behalf, and contrary to the provisions of the Liquor Acts, deal in or dispose of for various sums of money certain quantities of liquor (to divers persons mentioned), to wit, wine, etc." The accused was found guilty and sentenced to a fine of £20, or in default three months' imprisonment with hard labour. The ground of appeal was that the conviction was against the weight of evidence.

From the record it appeared that the only bottle licence issued for premises in Commercial-street was in the name of Silverston, and that no bottle licence in the name of Herman Cohen had been issued during the past two years. The defence was that the accused was entitled to sell liquors as he had done.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said that the premises were licensed, whatever may have been the case of the man. The Act 25 of 1891 laid special stress on the licence for premises, the first section stating that a bottle licence authorized the sale at the premises herein specified, but not elsewhere, of liquor in bottles, and so forth. The law contemplated the possibility of a manager being put in, and the premises not being carried on by the actual holder of the licence, as appeared from section 11 of Act 44 of 1885. The appellant was acting as representative of Silverston. He contended that the police had taken the wrong remedy. They should have taken proceedings under the 76th section of the Act 28 of 1883, which provided that the holder of any bottle licence, if he should permit any other person to manage, superintend, or permit any other person to manage, superintend, or conduct the business of the licensed premises during his absence for a longer period than one month without the consent of the R.M. the licence would be forfeit.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But that is only an additional punishment; that is the punishment that follows conviction.]

Mr. Gardiner: A manager is contemplated by the Act of 1885. Silverston, by authorising Cohen to go on and subsequently ratifying his acts, practically appointed Cohen manager.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones, De Villiers, C.J.: The accused was charged under the 75th section of the Act 28 of 1883 with selling liquor without a licence. The defence, as I understand, is that he was not really selling liquor, because he was managing for Silverston. He certainly held no licence; Silverston held the licence: He transferred to a man called Fleischer, but then the Licensing Board refused to sanction the transfer. Then, apparently, without Silverston's knowledge, the licence fell back into his hands. He never appointed the accused. He seems not to have known of the accused carrying on business. Anyhow, he never asked the accused to manage the business for him. If the accused had been a manager for Silverston no doubt he would have been protected. But if it was his own business, as it clearly was, then it was his duty to obtain a licence. In my opinion, the Magistrate was clearly right in holding that he was guilty of a contravention of the 75th section. The appeal must be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. GRANT.

{ 1904.
{ Dec. 2nd.

Cruelty to animals—Using lame horse.

Although working a lame horse is prima facie evidence of cruelty, such evidence is rebutted by proof that only gentle and beneficial exercise was given to the animal.

The appeal was from a decision of the R.M., Adelaide, in which the appellant was fined in £1, or to undergo one week's imprisonment, for wrongfully and cruelly working a horse that was unfit. The appeal was brought on the ground that the conviction was not supported by the evidence given in the R.M.'s Court.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for appellant) said that the appellant in giving the horse exercise was adopting the treatment advised by experts. The police did not warn the appellant, and there was no evidence of overloading. He submitted there was no evidence of cruelty to justify the conviction.

Mr. Jones (for the Crown) submitted there was no necessity to establish an intention of cruelty. Counsel would not say that the appellant knew the horse was being badly treated; the question was whether the appellant should not have known. It did not appear that the appellant actually carried out the instructions given by the experts.

De Villiers, C.J.: The charge against the appellant was that he wrongfully and cruelly ill-treated a horse, his property, by working the horse while being a cripple. The gist of the offence is cruelty to the animal, but a treatment causing some degree of pain does not necessarily constitute cruelty. The horse in question was lame, and I quite accept the proposition that the working of such a horse is prima facie evidence of cruelty. But it was proved at the trial that before the appellant used the horse he took the only expert advice available in his village, and the advice he received was that gentle exercise would be beneficial to the animal. The person who gave the advice, it is true, was only a farrier, but his advice was justified by the result, for the animal improved under this treatment. The animal was fresh and frisky enough when led to the water, showing that the pain could not be very great. The load on the gig when the horse was used was light, and the pace at which the horse went at the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed was slow. There was in my opinion no ill-treatment, and consequently no cruelty; and the appeal must be allowed.

WALKER AND JACOBSON V. NORDEN.

Promoters of company—Partners
—Joint and several liability
—Nonjoinder—Plea in abatement.

The defendant and S. and K. employed the plaintiffs, who were attorneys, to do the professional work in connection with the promotion and registration of a company, and afterwards S. and K. each paid one-third of the professional charges, but the defendant refused to pay his share.

Held, that the promoters of a company are not necessarily partners, and that the defendant could not lawfully object to the nonjoinder of S. and K. as defendants in an action brought against himself by the plaintiffs for one-third of their claim.

This was an appeal, brought by the plaintiffs in the action, from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. The suit was for certain charges in connection with the formation of the South African Tin Mines Syndicate, Ltd., the defendant being sued for one-third portion.

The summons called upon the defendant to pay a sum of £20 (reduced from £21 9s. 8d., to bring the matter within the jurisdiction of the Court), owing to the plaintiffs, as and being one-third share of certain costs and charges, amounting to £64 9s., for disbursements incurred, and professional services rendered, for and at the special instance and request of the defendant and Messrs. G. W. Steytler and J. Kets, in and about the formation and registration of a company called the South African Tin Mines Syndicate, Ltd. The other parties had each paid one-third share of the plaintiff's bill of charges, but the defendant had not paid, and he denied liability and pleaded the general issue.

At the hearing before the A.R.M., an exception was taken on behalf of the defendant on the ground that the action had been wrongfully brought, and that there was no contractual relationship disclosed in the evidence, and that nonjoinder appeared from the evidence.

The Magistrate granted absolution from the instance, without going into the defendant's case. In his reasons for judgment, he said that he considered the liability of Steytler and Kets to be a joint one, and that the fact of Steytler and Kets each having paid one-third of the joint debt did not give the plaintiffs the right to sue the defendant for a third share.

Mr. Upington was for the appellants; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Mr. Upington submitted that the Magistrate had mistaken the law upon the point in question, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue the joint debtor for his pro-rata share of the joint debt. Counsel cited the case of Auret v. Pienaar (3, Juta, 40). He took it where the liability was a joint one, each of the debtors could sue for his share of the debt.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant and Steytler and Kets were promoters of a Company and as such employed the plaintiffs, who are attorneys, to do the professional work connected with the formation and registration of the Company. After the work had been done each of the two other promoters paid his third share of the plaintiff's charges and disbursements, but the defendant refused, and on being sued in the Magistrate's Court he raised the defence that the Company, which had by that time been formed, was alone liable. The Court seems to have ignored this defence but granted absolution from the instance on the ground that Steytler and Kets ought to have been joined as co-defendants.

Prima facie, the persons who employed the plaintiffs are liable to pay the plaintiffs' charges. The company was not in existence at the time when they were so employed, and there is nothing to show that they ever expressly or tacitly consented to accept the company as their debtors in lieu of the three promoters. The Magistrate, therefore, properly held that the liability of the promoters had not been transferred to the company.

He held, however, as I understand his reasons, that the promoters were partners, and that, being liable in solidum as well as pro rata, they ought all to have been sued. In my opinion, however, the fact that the defendant Steytler and Kets joined in the promotion of a company did not constitute them partners, nor did it create a solid liability for the obligations incurred by them in such promotion. Steytler and Kets have paid their pro rata shares of their joint liability to the plaintiffs, and if they were now sued, they would be entitled to plead payment as a defence to the action. The practice of this Court is well established that a defendant who is liable for his pro rata share of a debt may be sued without those who jointly with him incurred the debt being joined as co-defendants. (Auret's Trustees v. Pienaar—3, Juta, 40.)

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to decide the question whether, if the promoters had been partners, it would have been necessary to join them all after the plaintiffs had received two-thirds of the debt as full settlement from them. The effect of an affirmative decision would be to deprive the plaintiffs of their recourse against the defendant unless they are prepared to break faith with the two other promoters. As was pointed out in Pienaar v. Rattray (12 S.C.C., 55), the general rule that all parties should be joined in an action for a partnership debt is not of universal application, and it may well be that it would not be applied in a case like the present. The Roman Law (Cod. 3-40-1) and the Dutch Law (Van Leeuwen's Comm., 5-3-11) allowed considerable latitude in enforcing the liability of one of several co-obligors, and the greater strictness of our practice may be ascribable to the influence of English precedents.

The appeal must be allowed with costs, and the case remitted to be tried on its merits.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. PARENT.

Theft from employer—Rules of firm.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. The appellant, Parent, had been convicted in the Court below of the theft of 4s., the property of Utting and Fairbrother, newsagents, Cape Town Station Bookstall, and fined £3, or, in default, fourteen days' imprisonment, with hard labour. Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

From the record, it appeared that the accused, who had been suspected of pilfering, had been subjected to a "trap." The accused was an assistant salesman, employed at the Railway Bookstall. The custom was for the assistants to pay over forthwith any money they received from customers to the pay desk. A detective bought certain books at 7s., and handed to the accused a marked half-sovereign, and received from him 3s. change. Accused handed in at the cash desk 3s., and on being challenged a few minutes later, he was found to still have the half-sovereign in his left hand. The defence was that there was no felonious intent, and that accused, during the stress of business, retained the money, intending to pay it over when an opportunity offered. The transaction took place on a mail day, when the bookstall was usually very busy.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he found that the accused was allowed five minutes in which to account for the sale, and that in the interval he had three other sales, and that, although he had paid in other money to the cashier, he had retained the half-sovereign. There had been a lull in the business, and yet the accused had not paid in the money. There was no excuse for not paying in the money; the accused showed no intention of paying over the money.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that there was a doubt in the case, that ought to have been given in favour of the accused. It was a matter of drawing an inference from certain evidence, and he submitted the inference their lordships would draw was that there was a doubt in favour of the accused. The evidence, he contended, was not strong enough to show that the accused did actually intend to convert the money to his own use. It seemed that the 3s. handed over by the accused did not refer to the purchase made by the detective. It was admitted that the general rule as to the paying in of the money forthwith was often broken on a mail day. It must also be borne in mind that the accused had hitherto borne an excellent character.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones, De Villiers, C.J.: The rule of the establishment was that the assistants should, on serving customers, immediately hand over the money to the cashier, and if any change was to be given them, the cashier would give the change. That was the rule, and a very wholesome rule it is. Well, on the occasion in question, a book was purchased, price 7s., and a half-sovereign was handed over to the accused. It was clearly then his duty to hand over that money to the cashier, and get the change from him; but, instead of doing that, the accused handed over 3s. to the purchaser and kept the half-sovereign, and then he handed over 3s. to the cashier. Well, that in itself was an extraordinary proceeding; it was quite contrary to the rule, and there seems to be no object in it. One cannot imagine the object of this proceeding, unless he were going to keep the money. But there were subsequent purchasers, and on each occasion the money was handed over by the accused to the cashier. The Magistrate, from this and other circumstances, came to the conclusion that the appellant's intention was to appropriate the money to his own use. There could not have been a great press of work at the time, because according to his own evidence, he was not then serving customers, but was occupied with his delivery-book. If he had time to attend to his delivery-book, he surely had time to hand over the 10s. to the cashier. No doubt, it is an inference from the facts, but it is impossible to say that the Magistrate drew a wrong inference. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorney: W. G. Coulton.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP
and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CIVIL APPEAL.

ESTATE WILLIAMS V. NEL. { 1904.
Dec. 5th.

Rebel—Belligerent rights—Com- mandeering.

This was an appeal brought by Christian Jacobus Nel, of Douglas (defendant in the Court below), from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Herbert.

From the record it appeared that Mr. W. L. Strachan, one of the executors testamentary in the estate of the late Isaac Williams, had sued Nel in the Court below for £23, goods sold and delivered. The Magistrate found for the plaintiff for £14 17s. 3d. on the claim, and for the defendant for £11 on a counter-claim, which he had filed. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for the difference of £3 17s. 3d., with costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that at the hearing the defendant said he was not present when the saddles and bridles were taken. He found that the defendant was present. There were four saddles and bridles taken, including two taken by the defendant. After referring to the case of Jacobsohn and Others v. Westhuisen, the Magistrate said that the defendant called a convicted rebel, Warden, who said he was the landdrost at the time, and that he ordered the defendant to obtain the saddles and bridles. So that this was an order from a rebel landdrost to a rebel field-cornet; and the order did not come from the commandant. The capacity of the person who gave the alleged orders had not been proved. He found for the plaintiff as regarded two saddles and bridles.

Dr. Greer was for the appellant; Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent. There was also a cross appeal in which Mr. Buchanan represented the appellant, and Dr. Greer was for the respondent.

Dr. Greer said that there were two points, mainly, raised in this case. The plaintiff in the action sued for four bridles and saddles, which were entered in the ledger of the deceased as having been bought by the defendant. The goods were obtained during the occupation of Douglas by the Boer Government during the fight at Sunnyside about January, 1900. Defendant said that he did not purchase the goods, but that he commandeered them, acting under orders from a Boer commandant. The other point in dispute was as to a sum of £3, for which the defendant said he ought to have been credited. The defendant said that this sum of £3 represented a purchase of wood by the plaintiff.

It appeared from the Magistrate's reasons that he had decided that there was no right to commandeering, and, if there was, then the defendant had exceeded his rights by taking two more bridles and saddles than he ought to have taken. He contended that the sum of £6 12s. allowed to the plaintiff on that account ought not to have been allowed by the Magistrate. In the case of Watson v. Bradley (13 C.T.R., 596), it was held that a rebel, acting under the orders of a rebel commandant, had the right to commandeering. The test applied in that case was as to whether the goods were commandeered rightfully for the purposes of war, or whether they were taken for one's own personal use. Counsel submitted that that test should be applied in the present case. The first question that arose was, whether these saddles and bridles were taken for the purpose of war? The evidence showed that Nel was with an armed body when he went to the stores, and that it was clear the goods were taken for the purposes of war. On the question of authority to commandeering, he submitted that Warden was appointed landdrost by a duly-appointed person, who had belligerent rights, and that the defendant acted under properly-constituted authority. On the other part of the claim as to the item of £3, counsel contended that two loads of wood were delivered by the defendant, and that he was entitled to a credit of £3.

Mr. Buchanan said that the plaintiff wished to support the judgment on the claim in convention. In regard to the claim in reconvention, he said that the Magistrate ought not to have allowed the £11 claimed by the defendant for mealies that, defendant said, he had supplied to the plaintiff. Counsel also contended that the Magistrate's own judgment revealed a discrepancy in the amount allowed. The Magistrate said that the defendant admitted items to the amount of £14 15s.; then he allowed 4s. 6d. for certain sticks; 12s. for the hotel account; and £6 12s. 6d. for two saddles. That brought the amount up to £22 4s. 9d., whereas the Magistrate only allowed the plaintiff £14 17s. 3d.

Dr. Greer said that the Magistrate's arithmetic seemed to have been correct, because he had allowed a credit in favour of the defendant amounting to £7 odd.

Mr. Buchanan said that he had overlooked that, and the only difference seemed to be, therefore, that the amount totalled up to £14 19s. 3d., while the Magistrate allowed £14 17s. 3d. He would not, however, trouble the Court about the two shillings. On the counter-claim, the Magistrate admitted that he had some hesitation in allowing the amount of £11. Counsel submitted that there was such an element of doubt as to whether the mealies were delivered by the defendant that the Magistrate ought to have given absolution from the instance on the counter-claim. As to the saddles and bridles, he submitted that the judgment in the case of Watson v. Bradley was clearly against his learned friend's contention.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant for an alleged balance of account for goods sold and delivered. The defendant disputes certain items in the account, and admits others. He also sets up a counter-claim. The Magistrate, after going very carefully into the evidence relating to the items in these two counts, and having taken a great deal of pains in dealing with the evidence, concluded that upon the claim in convention £14 17s. 6d. was due, and upon the claim in reconvention, £11. He therefore gave plaintiff judgment for the balance for £3 17s. 6d. Now, upon the bulk of the items contained in this case, there is no necessity to make any remark. The Magistrate's finding upon the items are supported by evidence on either side, and he is satisfied that something is due to the plaintiff on the one hand, and he has accepted the evidence for the defendant on the other hand as to the items in his counter-claim. But there is one item in the case which has been specially dealt with as raising a question of law. It appears that a claim is made for four saddles alleged to have been bought by the defendant from the plaintiff. It is contended by the defendant that these saddles were actually requisitioned through him by the order of the duly-appointed officers of the enemy during war for war purposes. The Magistrate has gone into the evidence on that point also, he has come to the conclusion that two of these saddles and bridles were actually requisitioned by the enemy for war purposes, and consequently he has decided that the defendant is not liable for them; but he has also decided, and there is evidence to support his decision, that two saddles were not requisitioned by the officers of the enemy for war purposes, but were taken by the defendant for his own purposes. On that ground, he has found the defendant liable for the saddles. It is perhaps not quite correct to state in the summons that these saddles were purchased. It would have been more correct to say that they were wrongfully taken, and that the plaintiff desired to recover their value, but the form of the summons will not prejudice the defendant in this case, because it appears he knew what the issue was, and he came prepared to meet that issue. The Magistrate has decided he wrongfully did take these saddles, and consequently he must be held liable. The appeal on both sides must be dismissed, and there will be no order as to costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. WYNNE.

1904.
Dec. 5th.

Liquor licence—Hotel manager—
Summons—Acts 44 of 1885,
Sec. 11, 39 of 1887, 28 of 1898, Sec. 2.

W., a hotel manager, had been convicted of a contravention of Sec. 2 of Act 28 of 1898, by selling liquor by his barman to a native. The barman had not been appointed by W., but by the hotel proprietor: and the summons did not allege that the native was not a registered voter.

Held on appeal, that as under Sec. 11 of Act 44 of 1885, the manager was responsible for the act of the barman, and as it was not necessary that the summons should allege that the native was not a registered voter, W. had been rightly convicted.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Port Elizabeth, by which the appellant was fined in £25, or three months' imprisonment with hard labour, for a contravention of the conditions of a liquor licence. A wine and spirit licence was issued to Catherine Wynne on the 2nd April, 1904, and afterwards, on the 18th April, the appellant, Daniel Wynne, was duly appointed as manager. During the absence of Catherine Wynne in England in September, Daniel Wynne was summoned for contravening the conditions imposed by the licence by supplying liquor to a native between the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. without the necessary permit from the authorities required by the section. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the barman denied that he sold the brandy, and brought two witnesses to corroborate his statement. The barman stated he knew the native very well, but in spite of that he went through the formality of asking his name, and if he were on the voters' list. He did not believe the evidence of the barman and his witnesses, as there were certain discrepancies.

Mr. Pyemont (for appellant) based his appeal on four grounds, viz.: (a) That the offence of which the accused was found guilty was no offence in law; (b) whoever was liable, the accused was not liable; (c) that the condition was ultra vires; and quite consistent with the hypothesis that accused was innocent. With regard to the first point, counsel said the accused was found guilty of wrongfully and unlawfully, and in contravention to the said licence, selling or supplying or exposing for sale a certain quantity of liquor to a native, and then found guilty on that. Surely that was no offence in law? It was admitted that they were selling every day to registered voters. Had the words "other than a registered voter" been inserted then the summons would have been correct. On the second point was the barman of the licence-holder, and it was competent for the prosecution to proceed against the barman or the principal, but not against the appellant. He submitted that the condition in the licence was ultra vires, and, on the question of the evidence, that the liquor might have been sold by the barman to a registered voter who handed it over to the native in question, or it might have been obtained outside the hotel altogether.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown) contended that the exception was a bad one. There was no good exception to be taken to the charge at all. If the Court found that the condition was ultra vires, then of course the summons was a bad one, but if the conditions were good, so was the summons. The licence was accepted with these conditions on it, and it did not lie with the appellant to say that these conditions were ultra vires.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the defendant was charged with contravening section 2 of Act 28 of 1898, in that, contrary to the conditions imposed on the licence, he sold liquor to a certain native mentioned in this charge. It appears that this native is not a registered voter, and consequently does not fall under the exceptions contained in the Act 39 of 1887. But it would seem that the conditions imposed upon the licence makes no special reference to registered voters, and consequently the charge is in very general terms. It alleges that the liquor was sold to this native without a permit from any one of the persons mentioned in the conditions. Now the question arose whether the charge was sufficient upon the allegations contained in it, considering that it omitted a statement that the native did not fall within the exceptions created by what is called the Hofmeyr Act. But it seems, upon the authority cited by Mr. Jones, that when the exceptions which would exempt a certain class of persons from the section is contained in another section or in another law, that it is not necessary to allege, that the person or thing mentioned falls under that exception, and upon that authority therefore it would seem that the summons is perfectly good. Now, upon the evidence, it appears that this liquor was sold at this hotel, which was under the management of the defendant, the defendant having been according to the requirements of the law properly appointed manager. It was argued that even though some responsibility would exist for the sale of the liquor, it should fall upon the holder of the licence or upon the barman. It appears, on reference to section 11 of Act 44 of 1885, that special provision is made for such a case. Seeing that it is quite clear that the holder of a licence would have been liable for the penalties imposed for the sale of this liquor in contravention of the conditions of the licence, these same penalties would fall upon the manager. Consequently, it is impossible to hold that under the circumstances the manager should be exempted because the barman was not specially appointed by him. As to the general character of the evidence, the liquor was sold to the native, who produced no permit, such as is required by the conditions, and consequently the section was contravened. The manager being liable for the contravention of this section, the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorney: G. Trollop.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.O., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

CRIMINAL APPEAL

REX V. ROBBIE AND OTHERS. } 1904.
Dec. 6th.

Evidence—Magistrate's finding.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Victoria East, the appellants (four natives) having been convicted on the 28th December last of a severe assault at or near the Yantolo Location upon another native named Ootise Robana.

The grounds of the appeal were: (1) That the conviction was not supported by the evidence given before the Court below; and (2) that it was contrary to law.

From the evidence it appeared that the affair had arisen out of a beer drink. A quarrel took place, and the complainant's brother and one of the accused fought. Complainant said he tried to separate them, and it was alleged that he was assaulted by the accused with knobkerries. A half-bottle was also thrown during the fight. The accused were all found guilty, and were sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

Mr. Cloee was for the appellants; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Cloee said he submitted with some little confidence that the Magistrate had taken rather a broad view of the evidence given by the complainant, who had charged the four accused with the assault. He had paid no attention to the circumstances corroborating the alleged assault and to the independent evidence which the accused brought. That was particularly the case in regard to accused No. 4, John Nodula. The story of the complainant was only corroborated by an interested person, viz., his brother. Counsel specially drew the attention of the Court to the evidence given by the headman as to the investigation which he made. The complainant's father admitted that accused No. 4 was engaged in separating the combatants. It was clear that there had been a rough-and-tumble fight. The complainant was not the only person injured; one of the accused and a witness had also been hurt. The Court should look at the provocation in this case. The only explanation of the fight given on the record was that one of the accused had been called by the complainant's brother a cow, because he had drunk more than his share of the beer. Counsel submitted that the accused should not have been charged with an assault. They might have been charged with a breach of the peace, but he did not see how they could properly have been charged with an assault. He submitted that the probabilities were in favour of the story given by the accused, and that the Magistrate should have given them the benefit of the doubt.

Without calling upon Mr. Nightingale,

De Villiers, C.J., said that, as far as the number of witnesses were concerned, those who gave evidence on behalf of the defence exceeded in number those who gave evidence on behalf of the prosecution. But the Magistrate was not bound to count heads; he had an opportunity of watching the different witnesses, and he must have come to the conclusion that the witnesses for the prosecution, although less in number, spoke the truth. Well, if they spoke the truth, there could be no doubt that a serious assault was committed. It was quite possible that the accused might have received considerable provocation, but, whatever provocation they received, there was no excuse for continuing the assault after the complainant was down. The mother of the complainant did not see the beginning of the fight, but she said that when she came to the kraal, she saw her son lying on the ground, and the four accused were beating him with sticks. She said she cried, and said to No. 4, "Why are you killing my son?" She went on to say, "I got in amongst them, and stood over my son to protect him. My son had no stick. He got up. I was struck down by accused No. 3. My son ran away, and the four accused ran after him." Well, if the object of No. 4 was to protect him, he (the learned judge) did not see why No. 4 should have run after the complainant. Then, the mother said that she followed, and she found her son on the floor again. The four accused were beating him. It was true that she was the mother of the complainant, but that would be no reason for her singling out some of these people as being the guilty persons. The Magistrate seemed to have believed her evidence. There were, no doubt, witnesses for the defence who gave a different version of the occurrence, but it was a pure question of credibility. The appeal must be dismissed.

Masendorp, J., concurred.

CIVIL APPEAL.

VOELOO V. MYBURGH.

Interpleader—Onus of proof—Magistrate's inferences from facts.

The Court allowed an appeal in a case in which the Magistrate had based his judgment rather on his inferences from facts than on the facts themselves.

This was an appeal from a judgment given by the Resident Magistrate of Oradock in an interpleader action, in which the present respondent, P. J. Myburgh, was the claimant.

From the record, it appeared that Voeloo and Van Heerden took out writs of execution against the property of one Edward Wilson, under which the messenger of the Court seized a buggy, in the possession of Wilson. Then Myburgh, whose daughter was married to Wilson, claimed that the buggy was his property, and the Magistrate adjudged the buggy to be the property of the claimant. The story given by Myburgh was that he allowed Mrs. Wilson to have the use of his buggy. Wilson said that he was absolutely without property.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the appellant, G. C. Vosloo; Mr. Pyemont was for the respondent.

Mr. De Villiers said it was clear that the only question in this case was whether Myburgh did satisfactorily prove before the Magistrate that the buggy was his property. There was only one other witness who supported his story, viz., his son-in-law, Wilson. Counsel thought it would not be difficult to show that Wilson's story was absolutely bristling with improbabilities and inconsistencies. Wilson admitted that on the 13th March, 1903, he borrowed a sum of £42 from one Van Heerden, of Murraysburg, and then, on the 16th March, he went and bought this buggy from Fitchett and McKenzie. This was a little time before Wilson married Miss Myburgh. Wilson now said that the money with which he bought the buggy, £50, was given to him by Myburgh, and that he bought the buggy as Myburgh's agent, and that it was understood between himself and Myburgh that the property was to vest in Myburgh. Counsel submitted that the fact that Wilson borrowed the money from Van Heerden, and that the receipt was made in the name of Miss Myburgh, showed that Wilson had bought the buggy as a wedding present for his future wife. The burden of proof was upon Myburgh to prove his claim, and counsel submitted that Myburgh had not satisfactorily proved dominium in the buggy. The judgment, he submitted, was against the rules and weight of evidence.

Mr. Pyemont said that this was an appeal brought by Vosloo alone. He contended that Vosloo was absolutely without locus standi, because the seizure was actually made after the expiry of the writ.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But ought not that objection to have been raised in the Magistrate's Court?]

Mr. Pyemont said he could not speak as to that, but he submitted that the appellant could not now appear, because he was in an illegal position.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But was there not a waiver by reason of what occurred in the Magistrate's Court?]

Mr. Pyemont said that there could be no waiver. Counsel contended that the writ had been superannuated. He submitted that the attachment was entirely irregular, and that the appellant had no appealable interest in the matter. Proceeding, counsel commented on the fact that although the writs were issued, the one in February and the other in March, no steps appeared to have been taken to execute them until the 28th September. He admitted that one buggy was purchased, and that it was afterwards exchanged for another. The buggy belonged to Myburgh; Wilson was the agent acting on behalf of Myburgh; although delivery was made to Wilson, acting on behalf of an undisclosed principal, such delivery was, in point of fact, to the principal. Counsel contended that the execution was irregularly carried out. The messenger did not go to the house of the debtor, and ask him to point out his goods, as it was customary to do. Wilson was an insolvent in 1901, he had not been discharged, and it lay upon the judgment creditor to show that Wilson could rightfully acquire property in 1903. Wilson and his wife were married by ante-nuptial contract, and it had not been shown that Wilson had any right over his wife's property.

De Villiers, C.J.: An objection has been raised on appeal which never was taken in the Court below. The objection is that the attachment took place after the return day of the writ of execution. But no objection of that kind was raised in the Court below, where an interpleader summons was issued by the Magistrate, in terms of the Magistrates' Courts Act, with the object of having it declared whose property this buggy was. That was the sole object of the interpleader. No objection was raised on either side to this question of property being raised, and I consider it is too late now to raise that objection, which was not raised in the Court below. The question is, does the property belong to the respondent, or does it not? If it does not belong to the respondent, then he has no ground for complaint. There is no trespass, as was suggested by the learned counsel for the respondent, if the property does not belong to him. If it does belong to him, then he ought to succeed in this appeal. Therefore, the sole question is whether this property which was attached belongs to Myburgh, the respondent, or whether it does not. It is a question, no doubt, of fact, but the Magistrate has been guided rather by the inference from facts than by any disputed facts in this case. Taking the whole of the evidence, he inferred from it that the proper conclusion is that that buggy belonged to Myburgh. In my opinion, that is the correct conclusion to be derived from the evidence, taken as a whole. The ostensible owner of the buggy was undoubtedly Wilson, who had been left in charge. It was bought, apparently, for him and his wife before the wedding, but the ostensible owner all this time was Wilson. The receipt of the original seller was given to Miss Myburgh, and not to her father, the claimant. After the buggy had been for some time in their possession, it was exchanged by Wilson for another vehicle, and it is this other vehicle, the other buggy, which was subsequently attached. Wilson took it to a coachmaker's for repairs. The repairs were charged for, not to Myburgh, but to Wilson. It is said that the money was paid by Myburgh, that it was handed by him to Wilson for the purpose of being paid, but, if that be so, it is extraordinary that Wilson did not insist at the time upon the receipt being made in favour of Myburgh. The receipt was given in favour of Wilson, and it was, it appears, while this buggy was being taken back to Wilson's place, for the purpose of again being used by him in the ordinary course, that it was attached. The Magistrate lays stress upon this fact, that the buggy was attached to a wagon belonging to Myburgh. Therefore, he says, this buggy was at the time in the possession of the claimant. But, in my opinion, that is not a correct conclusion. The mere fact of its being attached to his wagon is not proof that it was in his possession at the time. The wagon was being used by Wilson, and he was taking back this buggy to the farm for the purpose of being used by himself. The buggy, therefore, never was in the plaintiff's personal possession. It could only have been held to be in his possession if Wilson is treated as the agent of the purchaser for holding this buggy. But, in my opinion, there is not sufficient proof that for that purpose Wilson was the agent of the plaintiff. He had full control over the vehicle, he was allowed to do really with it as he liked, and it would be a very dangerous precedent if any Court were to hold now that a person, who has allowed another to appear as the ostensible owner, should, upon that person getting into difficulties, be allowed to say, "Although he appeared to be the owner, the property is really mine." In my opinion, in a case of this kind, the onus of proof that the buggy was the property of the claimant lay upon him, he having allowed another person to be looked upon as the owner. In my opinion, the claimant has not discharged the onus which lay upon him. All the circumstances and the documentary evidence tend to disprove the statement that the claimant was the owner. Wilson admits that not long before he stated on oath that this very same buggy belonged, not to the plaintiff, but to somebody else. Under these circumstances, great weight cannot be attached to the evidence given by Wilson. I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, with costs, in both Courts, and the property declared to be executable.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

VAN WYK V. TERBLANS. { 1904.
Dec. 7th.

Onus of proof—Magistrate's jurisdiction as to amount.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mossel Bay, the appellant having been sued in the Court below upon a promissory note.

The summons called upon the defendant, Van Wyk, to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay the plaintiff £15, with interest from the 3rd May, 1902, which he owed to the plaintiff by virtue of a certain overdue promissory note, dated the 3rd January, 1902. The defendant pleaded that about the 1st April, 1904, he paid to the plaintiff £10 sterling on account of the amount due on the promissory note now sued upon, and that, before the issue of summons, he tendered to the plaintiff and his agent £5, together with interest due thereon, which sum the plaintiff refused to accept. He again tendered to pay the plaintiff the said sum of £5 and costs, and prayed that the plaintiff be ordered to pay costs of suit. For a claim in reconvention, the defendant said that he had been slandered by the plaintiff, and he claimed compensation and damages in the sum of £20. The plaintiff admitted the tender, but denied that he had been paid £10 on account of the promissory note.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that, after hearing the story of the defendant and his son that the latter was sent by his father to the plaintiff to pay the sum of £10, he came to the conclusion that it was a bogus story, and that no such payment had ever been made, and that he could give no credence to the evidence of either father or son. On the other hand, he believed that the plaintiff, who gave his evidence in a straightforward manner, was speaking the truth. His views were materially strengthened when the boy Baron admitted in his examination-in-chief that he told a lie to the plaintiff in regard to a certain sheep transaction between plaintiff and defendant. As to the claim in reconvention, he was convinced that this claim had only been made and had only been set up by the defendant in case he failed to prove the payment of £10 on the promissory note. This brought his claim to £30, and thus placed the claim beyond his (the Magistrate's) jurisdiction.

Mr. M. Bisset was for the appellant; Mr. Close was for the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that no evidence as to the slander seemed to have been given in the Court below.

Mr. Bisset submitted that the Magistrate had erred, inasmuch as the judgment was against the weight of evidence, and because he had held that he had no jurisdiction in regard to the claim of £20 damages for slander. Counsel denied that, according to the record, the defendant's son had admitted having told the plaintiff a lie. He contended that the Magistrate had not given due weight to the evidence of father and son. As to the point of law, he submitted that the Magistrate had clearly jurisdiction to deal with the claim for damages. The Magistrate seemed to have treated the defendant's plea as an exception, and to have taken no evidence as to slander.

De Villiers, C.J., observed that it was clear the Magistrate was in error in treating the defendant's claim as being beyond his jurisdiction.

Mr. Close urged that, apart altogether from other questions, it was very doubtful indeed whether the words complained of by the defendant were slanderous. The plaintiff called the defendant a "schelm"; that certainly was not a pleasant word, but it could not be said to be slanderous. He thought it was really a great question whether it was worth while sending the case back again. It was by no means clear that the Magistrate decided the claim in reconvention solely on the ground of jurisdiction.

Mr. Bisset having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J., said that the plaintiff sued the defendant on a promissory note for £15, and the defence set up was that £10 had been paid on account, and there was a tender of £5. It lay upon the defendant to prove the payment, and, in order to do so, he called his son, who said that the defendant had given him £10 to pay the plaintiff, and that the money was duly paid. The plaintiff denied this payment. No receipt was given. That was a circumstance certainly against the defendant. The Magistrate, in giving judgment for £15, if he believed the plaintiff, was correct. But then there was a claim in reconvention for £20 for slander, and the Magistrate seemed to have been under the impression that, inasmuch as there was a defence of payment of £10, there could not be in addition a claim of £20 damages for slander. The Magistrate clearly erred, because the £10 was not really a claim, it was a set-off against the plaintiff's claim. Therefore, the defendant would have been perfectly justified, if he had a good claim of £20 for slander, in setting that up as a claim in reconvention.

But the difficulty in the defendant's way was that there was no proof whatever that evidence of the slander was taken either at the time when the defendant gave his evidence upon the claim in convention, nor after the plaintiff had given his evidence. Therefore, the Magistrate would have been quite justified in granting absolution from the instance upon the claim in reconvention. It would be possible for the Court to remit the case, so that the Magistrate might try the claim in reconvention, and take some evidence, but it seemed to him (the learned Judge) to be wholly futile. If the Magistrate was right in holding that this was a bogus defence, that the money never was paid by the defendant, then clearly the defendant deserved everything said of him by the plaintiff. The plaintiff would be quite justified in saying that he was a "schelm," if he set up a defence of that kind, and got his son to state falsely that £10 was paid when it never was. Therefore, it seemed to him (the learned Judge) that it would be wholly futile to send the case back to the Magistrate. In order to make the matter quite clear, the Court would grant absolution, so as to make it clear that the defendant would be entitled still to bring his action, if so advised. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs, but the judgment would be altered so as to make it quite clear on the claim in reconvention that, instead of its being dismissed, there would be absolution from the instance.

Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset; Respondent's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

JACKSON V. HAMMOND.

Mr. P. Jones appeared for the respondent in this matter, which was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of the Cape, and stated that he was instructed that the appellant did not intend to proceed with the appeal. There was no appearance for the appellant. There had been correspondence between the attorneys with regard to the withdrawal of the appeal. Counsel asked that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that, as the appellant did not appear, the appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP
and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REVIEW CASES.

REX V. KORTON AND OTHERS. { 1904.
Dec. 12th.

Acts 43 of 1885 and 35 of 1893—
Stock theft—Lashes.

Where a charge of stock theft is remitted under Act 43 of 1885, the Magistrate cannot inflict lashes unless there is a previous conviction against the prisoner within the preceding three years.

Mr. Justice Hopley said that this matter had come before him by way of review. The accused had been charged before the R.M. of Namaqualand, with the theft of six goats. A preliminary examination was held against them, and the Attorney-General remitted the case, not under the Act 35 of 1893, as he might have done, but under the Act 43 of 1885. The Magistrate thereupon sentenced the accused to hard labour for six months, and to receive 25 lashes with the cat-o'-nine tails. Under the Act under which the case was remitted, lashes could only be imposed in case the prisoners were found guilty of the offence, and there had been a previous sentence within three years immediately preceding, of some sort or other. In this case, as far as the records disclosed, there was no previous conviction against these men. Consequently, that portion of the sentence which imposed lashes was an illegality, and must be quashed. The sentence would, therefore, be quashed, except as to the six months' imprisonment in each case. The lashes must be struck out.

REX V. SAM WILSON.

Boy — Magistrate's jurisdiction under Act 43 of 1885.

A Magistrate cannot sentence a first offender if remitted under Act 43 of 1885 to a flogging if over the age of 14.

Mr. Justice Hopley said that this case had been heard before the R.M. of Worcester. The point raised was somewhat similar to the one in the last case. Remission was made under the same Act, No. 43 of 1885, and in this case a youth of 15 years of age was the prisoner. He broke into a house, and stole certain goods. The boy pleaded guilty, and the Magistrate sentenced him to receive 19 cuts of the cane. This also was a case of a first conviction, and, further, under the Act 43 of 1885, a boy over the age of 14 years could not be sentenced to lashes. The sentence must, therefore, be quashed as given, and the matter must be remitted to the Magistrate for the passing of a competent sentence. The conviction would be confirmed, and the sentence would have to be changed to something that was competent.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1904.
Dec. 12th.

Mr. Close moved for the admission of Andries Josef van Niekerk as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of George Percy Tarr as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Hermanus Lambertus Minnaar as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Hendrik Louw as an attorney and notary public, the oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate, Oudtshoorn.

Application granted.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

FORD V. MURRAY. { 1904.
Dec. 12th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £56 13s. 4d., with interest at 6 per cent. from the 5th March, 1904, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of capital.

Granted.

BATON, ROBINS AND CO. V. STRENSMA.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Granted.

VAN RENNEN V. COWLEY.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a bond for £248, with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st July, 1904, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond became due by reason of non-payment of the instalments.

Granted.

ZUIDMEER V. HEYNES.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.
Granted.

LEWIN AND SON V. FOURIE.

Mr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £326 18s. 9d., with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per month from 31st October, 1904.
Granted.

BARRY BROS. V. GOLDSTEIN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Granted.

HEINAMANN V. BERRY.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £625, with interest from 1st January, 1904, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.
Granted.

EILENBERG V. ABRAHAMS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £135, with interest from 1st November, 1904.
Granted.

HEYDENRYCH V. TAYLOR.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

The defendant said that when he gave Mackie Young the note, they said, as there was a dispute on, they would meet any difference between the bill and an account.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said they only asked for provisional sentence. The defendant could go into the principal case.
Granted.

SCHULTZ V. ROSSOUW.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Granted.

WILSON V. BOYCE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. The debt was £124 on a promissory note, and there was a return of nulla bona by the Sheriff.

The defendant appeared to state that his estate was quite solvent, and if he got a month's time he could settle the amount.

Mr. Buchanan said he was instructed not to agree to that. He was informed that the property was mortgaged up to the hilt. Counsel was instructed that the defendant had seen the Messenger of the Court.

Defendant: I really never saw the Messenger of the Court.

By Maasdorp, J.: His other property was worth about £17,000, and mortgaged for about £12,000.

Maasdorp, J., ordered the matter to stand over until later in the day, the defendant to see the parties in the meantime.

GOEDHALS V. STEGMAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for the sum of £400, with interest at 6 per cent from 1st March, 1904.
Granted.

BIRD V. PHILIP.

Mr. Joubert moved for provisional sentence for £310, with interest and costs on certain promissory note.
Granted.

LOUW V. WAHL.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

The defendant appeared and stated that his estate was quite solvent.

Mr. Bisset said a writ was issued, and the property was not sufficient to satisfy it.

The defendant urged that he was quite solvent, as all his debts were about £4,000, and the farm alone was worth £5,000. If the Court would let the matter stand over for a month he would be able to meet the plaintiff's claim.

The matter was ordered to stand over until later in the day.

Later on an order was granted as prayed.

HEYDENRYCH V. SONNING.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £330 19s. 11d., with interest on the various instalments at the rate of 6 per cent.

Granted.

OLEWER V. CUMMINGS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £60, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Granted.

SMITH V. ENGLEBRECHT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a Magistrate's judgment for £85, with interest at 6 per cent. from September, 1904, and £2 17s. taxed costs, and that property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Granted.

CROYDON BRICK CO. V. COTTERELL.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £430, with 8 per cent. interest and costs. Granted.

LITHMAN, LANDSBERG AND CO. V. BRYARS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a final order of sequestration against the defendant's estate. Granted.

SMITH V. MARKATESI.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence for £32 10s., in virtue of a judgment in the Magistrate's Court, with £3 costs, and that certain one-third share in land be declared executable. Granted.

WILSON V. A. M. E. CHURCH.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,150, with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st July, 1903, and £9 16s., a premium of insurance, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Granted.

THORNE V. BATAILLOU.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £3,600, with 6 per cent. interest from 1st January, 1904, less £50 paid on account, on two mortgage bonds, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Granted.

FEDERAL SUPPLY CO. V. COETZER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court for £229 5s. 2d., less £10 paid on account, and costs, £26 2s. 2d.

The defendant appeared, and stated that he signed a contract first of all with the manager of the plaintiff's company, and subsequently, as a matter of form, with his nephew. He had got absolutely no money, and he could not proceed against his partner. The witness went into the box and stated that at the present moment he was a broker. In the Transvaal he had property in his mother's name, which he could not touch until her death. At present he was making about a couple of pounds a week, and out of that he could barely keep a wife and four children.

Cross-examined: He was in partnership with Mr. Kinsley as legal practitioners. Mr. Kinsley had absolutely nothing. Witness had about £800 outstanding debts. For the last four months he hadn't got a penny of that. He had offered £10, but failed to get any money out of his Indian debtors, many of whom he had put in gaol. Subsequently the plaintiff company accepted an offer of £3, but witness found himself unable to even pay that.

Mr. Gardiner suggested that the defendant's watch and chain were surely worth something.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is your watch worth?]

Defendant: Twenty-two guineas, my lord.

Maasdorp, J., said there would be no order, but the creditors could, if they wished, attach the watch.

REID AND NEPHEW V. SELLAR.

Mr. P. Jones moved for costs on a promissory note, which had been paid, and on which judgment had been given. Granted.

SEPEL AND SALBER V. GETZ.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a final order of adjudication against the defendant's estate. Granted.

SACHS V. LEIBENBERG.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £104 3s. 9d., with 8 per cent. interest per annum. Granted.

PAARL BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. ECKSTEEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £1,800 on three mortgage bonds, and £1 6s. 9d. insurance premium, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Granted.

SCHWEIZER V. NGOWABE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, with interest. The bond became due by reason of non-payment of interest, he also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Granted.

SLADE, ALEXANDER AND CO. AND OTHERS V. LAZARUS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Granted.

KEUGER V. VENTER AND NAUDE.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £24, interest and costs.

Granted.

GENERAL ESTATE AND ORPHAN CHAMBER V. TAHAAR AND SACK.

Mr. P. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, with interest from 26th August, 1903, at the rate of 6 per cent., and that the property be declared executable, with costs.

Granted.

FURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. PENTZ.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment for £77 5s., and costs, £10.

The defendant said if he had a chance he could pay the debt. At present he was out of work, and had nothing at all. Last week he earned 14s.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He received £210 for a job at Maitland, and paid Ahlbom, Gullander and Co. £130, and the rest went in wages. He was shortly taking a job at 6s. a day.

An order was granted, to be suspended pending payment of 10s. a month.

ESTATE GOODSON V. INGRAM.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,350, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and also for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. SHUNSHUNDIEN.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence for £70, balance due on a mortgage bond, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest, also for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. FINKINS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. P. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, with costs.

Mr. D. Buchanan appeared for the second defendant to confess judgment.

Order granted.

DANVERS AND CO. AND OTHERS V. HEMPEL.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER SPUY V. LAING.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, due and payable by reason of non-payment of interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Counsel also asked for judgment for rents which might fall due from date.

Judgment was given in the ordinary form, i.e., provisional sentence and property declared executable.

ARDERNE V. BASHAW.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable, with costs.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. DAUW.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest, the bond having become due on account of the non-payment of interest; counsel applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable,

Order granted.

JELLIMAN V. COETZER.

Mr. Sutton moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate, as insolvent, to be superseded.

Order granted.

THE MASTER V. WIGGETT.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for the usual order against the respondent to file an account in an estate of which he is executor.

Usual order granted.

KENDRICK V. DE BEER AND MAIDMENT.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of a Resident Magistrate. Since the issue of the writ, £27 had been paid off. The amount now owing was about £15.

Defendants offered £2 a month.

Decree granted, to be suspended on payment of £3 a month, first payment to be made on the 30th January, 1905.

SHEPPARD V. HEYNS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £54, balance of purchase price of certain lots of property, with interest, and costs of suit, plaintiff tendering transfer.

Order granted.

OOSTHUYLS AND DE GRAAFF V. VAN HEERDEN.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on two judgments of the R.M. of Steynsburg, for £19 10s., less £4 8s. 4d., and for an order for the attachment of certain funds and for costs.

Order granted.

MANGOLD BROS. V. KEUN.

Mr. Pittman moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £68, and also for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £12.

Order granted as prayed.

LANDS DEVELOPMENT CO., LTD. V. MILES AND BOYD.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment upon certain conditions of sale for £126, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

JAGGER AND CO. AND OTHERS V. MYERS

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SHEPPARD V. VAN REENEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds respectively for £250 and £1,000, the bonds having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

MOSTERT V. MULLER. { 1904.
Dec. 12th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £90, less £4 paid on account, being rent of premises, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Defendant admitted the debt, but asked for a postponement until after the sale of his house.

Mr. Bisset opposed the application of the defendant.

Ordered to stand over until to-morrow.

Postea (December 13th).

Mr. M. Bisset said he had consulted his attorneys, and found that they were unwilling to grant the defendant an extension of time. He also, on behalf of the plaintiff, now moved for the rule nisi interdicting the defendant's goods to be made final.

Mr. Greer (for the defendant) consented to judgment, but applied for a stay of execution for nine days, and said that the defendant hoped to raise sufficient in the meantime to discharge the claim of the applicant.

Judgment was given for the plaintiff, with costs, execution to be stayed until the 22nd inst., and interdict to be made absolute, with costs, to be suspended until the said date upon the defendant giving goods or finding security to the value of £100.

LAITE AND CO. V. SCARLES.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £59 1s. 11d., goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

NOON V. NOON.

Mr. Benjamin moved (for defendant) for judgment, under Rule 455, to sign judgment against the plaintiff in the action for not filing his declaration, plaintiff having been barred.

Order granted.

FRIEDLANDER AND DU TOIT V.
GRIFFITHS.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £6 17s. 4d., professional services and money disbursed, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

FAURE, VAN EYK AND MOORE V.
ESTATE RICHARDS.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £46 13s. 11d., in terms of declaration, being amounts due for professional services, moneys disbursed, etc., with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. ROSSOUW.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £166 1s. 6d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

SMIT V. LAZARUS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said that, seeing that the defendant's estate had been provisionally sequestrated, proceedings in this matter, which was an application under Rule 329d, would have to be stayed.

No order.

SCHOONUL AND CO. AND OTHERS V.
CLARKE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £43 10s., rent due and payable, with interest a tempore morae and costs. The summons, counsel said, had been served upon the defendant's agent, Mr. G. W. Steytler.

Ordered to stand over, pending due service on the defendant or his general agent.

Postea (December 14th).

Mr. Gardiner renewed his application for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £43 10s., with interest, a tempore morae, and costs. Counsel put in an affidavit to the effect that Mr. G. W. Steytler, upon whom service had been made, held the defendant's power of attorney, authorising him to prosecute and defend actions for and on behalf of the defendant.

Judgment granted as prayed.

SKEAAR V. WEINTROB AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for delivery of a certain null and void deed of hypothecation, etc.

Order granted in terms of prayers (a) and (c).

LENNON, LTD. V. SCHAPERA.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £119 6s., less £120, paid on account for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Granted.

CAPE AUCTION CO. V. PRIDEAUX.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £40 4s., for moneys disbursed by the plaintiff for the defendant, with interest and costs.

Granted.

BOSMAN, POWIS AND CO. V. MIALIA.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £32, rent due by the defendant, with interest and costs.

Granted.

BLABERG AND CO. V. AJAM.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £30 4s. 11d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V.
COSAY.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £308 19s. 1d., less £158 19s. 1d. paid on account, with interest and costs.

Granted.

TULE V. ATTAWAY.

Mr. P. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329, for transfer of certain plots of land on the Lansdowne-road, failing that, the defendant to pay £20 as arranged.

Granted.

DREYER AND OTHERS V. DUKE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £71 13s. 10d., for rent due, with interest and costs.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ASTON V. ASTON. { 1904.
Dec. 12th.

Mr. Rowson moved for a decree of divorce. On June 3 an order, calling defendant to return to the plaintiff by the 15th August, was granted, or to show cause by the 31st August, why a decree of divorce should not be granted. Delay had been caused through some little trouble with regard to the passage money which had been tendered to the defendant, but she refused it, and stated her intention of not returning.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ROUX.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to have a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act made absolute.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte CARNEY.

Mr. Russell moved to make absolute a rule nisi, granted under the Derelict Lands Act.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte KRIEGER AND OTHERS.

Mr. De Waal moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte DIENER.

Mr. Benjamin moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte MENTOR.

Mr. Roux moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte FRASER AND ANOTHEE.

Mr. Gutsche moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte THE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL OF HUMANSBORO.

Mr. P. Jones moved to have made absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act, with respect to certain erven.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte COURTENAY.

Mr. Sutton moved to have a rule nisi made absolute calling on all persons to show cause to the Registry Surveyor of Deeds why he should not remove certain lots of land and portions of roads at Elsie's River Halt from the plan filed in his office.

Rule made absolute.

MASTER V. WIGGETT.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order of personal attachment against the defendant for contempt of Court. The defendant was the sole trustee in an estate, and he failed to comply with the Master's request to file an account.
Granted.

Ex parte SPIERS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on all persons to show cause why a certain transfer of land at Malmesbury should not be cancelled.

Rule made absolute.

SCANLON V. BERT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to make a rule nisi final, calling on the defendant to show cause why certain money should not be declared executable.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte GOLDSCHMIDT.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for an order amending the title of certain land at Adelaide. The application was made on behalf of the Dutch Reformed Church, who were anxious to dispose of certain erven. The petition was supported by the chairman of the Municipality. The Registrar of Deeds reported in favour of the petition. The portion of the land in question was by error excluded from a diagram.

Order granted in terms of the petition.

Ex parte GRIPPER AND ANOTHEE.

Mr. Close moved for an order of registration of a certain contract of marriage. A contract was drawn up in England before the bonds of matrimony were entered into by the parties, but it did not correctly set forth the intentions of the parties, which were to exclude liabilities and all profit and loss, and another contract had subsequently been drawn up in the Colony.

Maasdorp, J., said the matter might be mentioned again. In the meantime, he would compare the two contracts.

Ex parte REYNOLDS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order of registration of a certain ante-nuptial contract, which, owing to certain informalities, had not been filed within the requisite time.

Granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte HIGGS. } 4904.
} Dec. 13th.

Mr. Schreiner moved for an order authorising the executors in the estate of Arthur Frederik Morris to pay to petitioner one-half share of the movables belonging to the said estate. The petitioner was the widow of the late Mr. Morris, and had remarried. The petitioner and deceased had executed a joint will, under which they had bequeathed the property to their son, Henry Ernest Morris, subject to a life interest to the petitioner. The son, Henry Ernest Morris, was twenty-three years of age, and the will provided that transfer of the landed property should be granted to him when he attained the age of twenty-five years. He consented to the present application. The value of the movables was stated to be about £3,000. Under the proposed arrangement, said counsel, the son would at once receive all the immovable property and half the movables, while the petitioner would receive half the movables.

[Hopley, J.: It seems to be a family arrangement that you wish the Court to sanction?]

That is so, my lord.

Hopley, J., said it seemed to be a generous arrangement that was proposed on the part of the petitioner, and one that was entirely beneficial to the son; the executors offered no opposition, and he could see no reason why the prayer of the petition should not be granted. An order would be granted as prayed, authorising payment to the petitioner by the executors of one-half share of the movables belonging to the estate of herself and her late husband, the other half, therefore, being from this time vested in her son, and also the whole of the immovable property, and all rents and interests accruing from the half of the movables and the whole of the immovable property to be henceforth for the benefit of the son.

Ex parte BARTLETT.

Mr. Russell said that in this matter an order had now been drafted between the Master and the parties, and he applied for this order to be sanctioned by the Court. The petitioner was granted leave to raise a mortgage on certain property for such a sum, not exceeding £2,500, as the Master should deem necessary, subject to certain terms and conditions duly specified.

Order granted in terms of draft order now read.

Ex parte THE WORCESTER BUTCHERY COMPANY.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan presented the report of the liquidators, and moved for the usual order that the report should lie for inspection.

Usual order granted.

HANSEN V. ESTATE HANSEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of Martin Christian Hansen (son of the insolvent, Christian Martin Hansen) for an order for payment of certain costs out of his father's insolvent estate. Notice of the application had been served upon the trustee in the insolvent estate, who, however, did not enter an appearance. The applicant, it appeared, had incurred costs, because the summons in the insolvency proceedings had been served upon him, and he declared that he was then perfectly solvent. If it was claimed that the summons was against his father, then he could not accept service, as his father was detained at Valkenberg, and was ignorant of these proceedings. Counsel (in reply to his lordship) said that the costs, as a matter of fact, would come out of the petitioning creditors' pockets, because there were no funds in the insolvent estate.

The costs were ordered to come out of the insolvent estate, including costs of the present application.

WEINTROUB AND PENKIN V. STEER.

Mr. Struben (for the respondent) applied for a postponement of this matter until the 12th January.

Mr. Burton (on behalf of the applicants) opposed, and said that it would be a great inconvenience if the matter had to stand over for a month. There was a certain dispute in regard to water rights of the applicants' property at Green Point.

After hearing Mr. Struben, Hopley, J., said that the matter would be postponed until the 12th January, upon an undertaking by the respondent to enable the applicant temporarily to overcome his difficulties in regard to water leading, question of costs to abide the result.

Ex parte KOTZE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the secretary of the Malmesbury Board of Executors to pay the sum of £46 8s. 5d., standing to the credit of the former Agricultural Society, Malmesbury, to the present Malmesbury Agricultural Society. Counsel submitted that the objects of the two societies were identical, and urged that in view of the small amount of the fund an order should be granted. The fund had been lying with the Board of Executors for a period of eleven years.

Hopley, J., said that he was unable to grant an order such as had been applied for, vesting one society with the moneys of another society now defunct, even though their objects were similar, and they were operating in the same district. It seemed to him that any parties concerned should have the opportunity of being heard before money was granted away in that fashion. There would be no order in the present application.

Ex parte SMITHERS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the execution of a post-nuptial contract.

An order was granted in terms of the prayer, the parties to be allowed to register the post-nuptial contract, the said registration not to affect the rights of any creditors or parties otherwise interested in either spouse prior to registration.

WALKER V. MARTIN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment in terms of a consent paper over certain transfer of land at Mossel Bay sold by the defendant to the plaintiff for £1,800. It appeared, however, that in July last the defendant Martin's wife, who was about to sue for judicial separation, took out an interdict restraining him from giving transfer of the land pending the action.

[Hopley, J.: Has the action been brought?]

No, my lord.

[Hopley, J.: Would it not be the proper course to have the interdict set aside?]

Mr. Bisset: Yes, my lord, but I would ask for judgment in terms of the consent paper subject to the understanding that this interdict is withdrawn.

Hopley, J., said there would be judgment in terms of the consent paper, but steps would have to be taken to get the interdict removed before transfer could be obtained.

ELLIS, KISL'NGBURY AND CO. V. BERGL.

This was an application for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of the applicants in London.

Mr. Close moved, and stated that his learned friend had a similar application to take the evidence of the defendant and others.

Mr. Gardiner said the respondent consented to the application.

Commission granted to examine the witnesses mentioned in the application, and any others that may be tendered by either side, Mr. J. T. Oliver, of London, to act as commissioner, and costs to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

PERL AND CO. V. MCKEN- { 1904.
DRICK. { Dec. 14th.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the R.M. of Stellenbosch for £3 17s. 6d., together with £2 5s. 7d., taxed costs, and for an order attaching certain money in the hands of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, which had become payable to the defendant. Negotiations for a settlement had, Mr. Sutton explained, proved unsuccessful.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

VAN NIEKEEK AND CO. V. FABER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sue by edictal citation, and to attach certain medicines and other movable articles ad fundandam jurisdictionem. The petitioners were general dealers and hotel keepers in the district of Clanwilliam, and amongst the outstanding claims they had taken over in the transfer of the business was one against Faber, a physician, late of Clanwilliam, to the amount of £115 14s. 10d., for goods sold and delivered, board and lodgings, and money lent and advanced.

Leave to sue was granted, and the goods directed to be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, rule to be returnable on the 1st February.

BOISSON V. BOISSON.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to sue, by edictal citation, respondent's whereabouts being unknown.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the 15th November, personal service to be effected, failing which, publication in the "Government Gazette," and the "Daily Telegraph," London, and upon the parents of the respondent.

Ex parte MEIRING.

Mr. Du Toit moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent a minor in the partition of certain property in the district of Oudtshoorn, Mr. Hendrick A. Wepener being suggested as curator.

Order granted as prayed.

FOURIE AND OTHERS V. MOSTERT AND OTHERS.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for an order in terms of a certain consent paper, the parties having agreed to allow the notice of motion to stand as summons, and to go into the principal case.

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

COCHRANE AND CHERRY V. WOODSTOCK COUNCIL AND OTHERS.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), on behalf of the applicants, on motion, moved for an order in terms of consent paper, the parties having agreed that the judgment given in the action for the present respondents (Cochrane and Cherry) for £7,000 odd should be varied, and that judgment should be entered for £5,000 and taxed costs, and that the proceedings instituted by the Water Board for a new trial be withdrawn.

Sir H. Juta (with him Mr. Rainsford), for the respondents, assented.

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

In re THE COLONIAL BUILDING CORPORATION.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., presented the liquidators' report, and moved that the report should lie for inspection, and the usual notices be issued.

Usual order granted, and publication directed to be made in the "Cape Times."

In re THE COLONIAL ASSURANCE CO., LTD.

Mr. P. Jones presented the final report of the four liquidators, and moved for a date limit to be fixed for recognition of claims and for the liquidators' remuneration to be fixed.

Order granted, all claims to be filed within three months, one publication of notice to be given in the "Cape Times" and the "Daily Telegraph" (London), and liquidators' remuneration to be at the rate of 1½ per cent. on the funds distributed (£61,000).

Ex parte MICHELSON.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the release of the petitioner's estate from insolvency. The estate had been sequestrated to the R.M. of Oudtshoorn, but no claims had been filed, and no trustee had been appointed.

Order granted, the estate to be released from sequestration, saving the rights of creditors.

Ex parte VAN BREDA.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent certain minors in an action to be brought in regard to a Bredasdorp estate.

Order as prayed, Mr. Advocate Gardiner to be curator ad litem, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte WADDELL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Uppington moved for an order declaring a certain holograph will, not properly executed in accordance with the Wills Ordinance, to be valid, and directing letters of administration to be issued to the surviving spouse, and the testator's son, Andrew Waddell, who were appointed executors under the will. The testator, Wm. Waddell, had carried on a large business as a butcher at Umata, and the estate was of considerable value. The Master refused to recognise the will, as it had not been properly attested as required by law. The will was in the handwriting of the testator, and left the property to the children in equal shares, subject to usufruct to the surviving spouse. Petitioners submitted that the will was privileged. Counsel quoted the ex parte application of Huskisson and another (Supreme Court reports), in support of the petition.

Maasdorp, J., said that an order would be granted declaring the will valid—in so far as the rights of the children were concerned, without deciding the rights of the wife, and authorising the Master to appoint the executors mentioned in the will.

In re THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS, LTD.

Mr. Searle, K.C., presented the liquidators' report, and moved for the usual order that the report should lie for inspection, and that publication should be given once in the "Government Gazette," and twice in the "Cape Times" and "Cape Argus."

Usual order granted, with publication as prayed.

In re THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS, LTD.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., presented the report of the receivers, and moved for the usual order that the report should lie for inspection. He pointed out that the matter was one of some magnitude, the admitted claims amounting to £93,000, and the claims, which had been fought and so on, amounting to £382,000. Seeing that the range of creditors and claimants was so very extensive, wider publication of the notice than was usually given was necessary, and counsel asked his lordship to direct publication in the "Government Gazette," and once a week for three weeks in the "Times" (London) (failing which, the "Daily Telegraph," London), "Cape Times," "Cape Argus," "South African News," "Eastern Province Herald," and "East London Dispatch."

The usual order was granted, the report to lie for inspection at the office of the receivers until the 14th February, with publication as applied for.

CARTWRIGHT AND CO. V. GRIFFITHS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the rule, granted on December 3, interdicting certain goods, to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

Ex parte MOSTERT.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to sell a certain farm Glencliffe, in the division of Bedford. The ground set out in the petition for the application was that landed property in the said district was fetching very high prices at present, and that there were indications that there would be a fall ere long. The Divisional Council's valuation of the farm was £2,767, and the petitioners expected that the property would produce about £3 10s. per morgen, or about £7,000 odd.

The Master, in his report, assented to the application, subject to certain provisions to protect the rights of the minors, and commented on the fact that, while the property market was reported to be depressed in all other parts of the Colony, it should be said to be so good in the Bedford district.

Order granted with leave to sell, the reserve price to be a minimum of £3 per morgen, proceeds to be invested in terms of the Master's report.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

TURNBULL V. STEWART. { 1904.
{ Dec. 14th.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a certain acknowledgment of debt of £150, less £67 11s. 6d., for which credit had been given, and on a promissory note of £50, less £22 10s. 6d., for which credit had been given.

Defendant's affidavit denied that he was liable to the plaintiff in the sum of £150 or any part thereof. He (the defendant) had executed a deed of assignment in favour of his creditors; although that deed was not signed by the plaintiff, he duly received a dividend under that deed. As to the alleged debt of £50, he denied that he was liable for the said sum or any part thereof, and said that he had signed the bill purely for the accommodation of the plaintiff, who gave him no consideration or value.

The answering affidavit of Reginald Metcalfe, of the firm of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, stated that the defendant had made an offer which would have required over twelve years to extinguish the debt. Defendant had never before raised the defence that the note was an accommodation note.

The replying affidavit of the defendant denied the statements contained in Mr. Metcalfe's affidavit, and Mr. Gardiner (for the defendant) submitted that this was not a case for provisional sentence. He contended that the plaintiff should be ordered to go into his principal case. He submitted that the plaintiff had acquiesced in the deed of assignment.

Sir H. Juta (for the plaintiff) said that the documents showed how little reliance could be placed upon the defendant's statements. The defendant had acknowledged the debt.

Maasdorp, J., said that he had come to the conclusion that there was not a final release, but that there might be something in the trust deed which continued his indebtedness to the plaintiff. Under all the circumstances, he thought that the plaintiff having produced the liquid document, and there being no proof upon which the probability of success on the part of the defendant was established, provisional sentence would be given as prayed. If defendant could establish the defence which he now merely suggested, without proof, then he would be entitled to succeed. Provisional sentence would be granted as prayed.

KRUGER V. FAEHSE AND CO.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the compulsory sequestration of the defendants' partnership and private estates.

Dr. Greer, having read affidavits, submitted that there was no property left in the estate. He contended that the petitioning creditors should withdraw the application, seeing that there were no assets in the partnership estate or the private estate of Bernhardt.

Order granted for final adjudication.

Maasdorp, J., remarked that no legal ground had been set up by defendant, and the defence was more in the way of an appeal to the creditors.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. MCKEN- { 1904.
ZIE AND CO., LTD. { Dec. 15th.

Discovery — Detailed statements of account.

There is no rule of Court whereby a defendant can be compelled to disclose items on which a tender made by him is based.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order compelling the respondents to render particulars of certain items in the applicants' account, which they admitted. The plaintiffs claimed from the defendants £90 odd, for advertising charges, etc., and the respondents had tendered £23 3s. 5d., with costs, but had not specified the items that they admitted.

His Lordship said that the application seemed to him to be quite unusual. He did not see how the Court could compel the defendants to disclose the items on which their tender was made up.

Mr. Bisset said that the particulars would be important, so as to enable the plaintiffs to know what items they would have to prove at the trial. Counsel cited the case of Hills v. Colonial Government (12, C.T.R., 951), though he admitted that this was not exactly on all fours with the present application, while similar in principle. He contended that, if the order now asked for were granted, it would result in a saving of costs. Counsel, in reply to his lordship, said that he was not aware of any rule of Court bearing upon an application of this kind. The matter, he argued, was one of practice, and the Court might well, in the interests of the Court and the parties concerned, grant such an order as was now prayed for.

Hopley, J., said that it was perhaps unfortunate that the defendants did not openly show their hands to the applicants, and tell them what items they were ready to admit. He thought it would be wise on their part to do so, and it might save expenses to the parties. At the same time, he was asked now to make an order, which was of a novel character, and which was not supported by any particular rule of Court, and, as far as he could gather from counsel, he could give no precedent for the application now made. Although in this particular case, it might be convenient to make such an order, he could quite conceive that it might lead to a very inconvenient practice in the future. All that he could do at present was to give a warning to the defendants that they had better, unless they had strong reasons to the contrary, discover the items they admitted, so as to save expense, and that if they did not do so they might have to pay costs even upon those terms. He would leave the question of the costs of this particular application to abide the result of the trial. It was quite possible that the costs of this application might have to go against the defendants. He could give no order, but he would give the warning that this seemed to be a reasonable application on the part of the plaintiffs, and, although there was no proper process whereby he could compel the defendants to make discovery, he thought it would be wise of the defendants to comply with the plaintiffs' request. No order would be made.

Ex parte VISSER.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (in the absence moved for the applicant for leave to mortgage certain property in the estate of her late husband and herself, in order to make up a deficiency of £223, due to her under a legacy of £1,000, bequeathed under the will.

The matter was ordered to stand over till later in the day.

At a later stage,

Mr. Buchanan informed his lordship that he had had the opportunity of going more carefully into the brief. He now renewed the application.

Hopley, J., said that the petitioner had evidently foregone some of her rights under the will by taking this legacy. Leave would be granted to the petitioner to mortgage the farm for £240.

BATCHELOR V. SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES.

This was a motion upon notice calling upon the respondents to show cause why this case should not forthwith be set down for hearing, with or without the evidence of a certain witness, one Polmear.

The petition stated that the case had been adjourned sine die, until the evidence of Charles Maple Polmear, of East London, could be taken. Between the 24th November and the 2nd December Polmear was driving about in a dogcart, and apparently able to transact business. Petitioner was being greatly prejudiced by the delay in the hearing of the case. Further, his principal witness (J. Batchelor) informed him that it would be impossible for him to remain out here much longer, and that he desired to return to his business in England.

Certain answering affidavits stated that the witness Polmear was still unfit to give evidence. His medical adviser said that, although convalescent, Polmear was still in a very weak and nervous state. It was imperative that he should have complete rest and change for at least a month, as soon as he was able to travel.

Counsel was proceeding to read certain answering affidavits, when Hopley, J., said he did not see any need to go further into the question. The affidavit of the doctor was dated the 5th December, and the month was expiring. He thought that the Court might now very properly fix a date. The matter would be set down for hearing before a jury on the 10th January.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for applicant; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan), for respondent.

Mr. Upington afterwards moved for a commission to take the evidence of Alfred Letellier, until lately employed by the South African Breweries as their manager at East London. Letellier was at present out of employment, and it was not improbable that he would shortly be leaving the Colony.

Sir H. Juta submitted that, in view of the early date upon which the case would be heard, there was no need to take the evidence on commission. He complained that obstacles that were not legitimate had been repeatedly placed in the way of his client to prevent him getting his money.

Mr. Upington repudiated the suggestion that his clients were placing unnecessary obstacles in the way of the plaintiff proceeding with his action.

Hopley, J., said that the matter would stand over pending the production of an affidavit by Letellier as to whether he intended to leave the Colony before the date fixed for the trial.

GARDINER AND EASTON V. NEW ZEALAND AND AFRICAN STEAMSHIP CO.

Mr. Close moved for an order authorising the refund of certain money paid into court by the applicants as security for certain cattle which had been released from the custody of the respondent company. The applicants had paid the money on condition that the respondents should forthwith institute an action. The action had not been instituted forthwith.

Sir H. Juta, for the respondents, said that they had not had an opportunity of instituting an action during the November term within the period allowed. Their declaration had now been filed.

Hopley, J., said that the case was not one of urgency, and that it should stand over. In the meantime, he thought that a settlement would, perhaps, be arrived at between the parties.

WILSON AND CATHCART V. YOUNG.

Spoliation—Costs.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order for the delivery of a certain house at Observatory-road, which had been wrongfully, unlawfully, and forcibly entered upon by the respondent. The plaintiffs were builders and contractors at Observatory-road, and the defendant was Robert Young, trading as Young Bros. The plaintiffs said that they had entered into a contract with the respondent to erect for him certain premises, and that they had completed the work, and supplied the respondent with an account showing a sum of £224 10s. still owing them in connection with the contract and extras. The applicants had retained the key of the premises, but the respondent had broken open and taken possession of the house.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan read an affidavit by the respondent, who denied that he had wrongfully or forcibly taken possession of the premises. He stated that the applicants had not completed the contract in accordance with the plans and specifications, and that certain work had not been executed in a workmanlike manner. He had paid to the applicants a sum of £1,365, and he had retained the balance of £199 pending the completion of the contract.

An order was granted, requiring the respondents to pay the sum of £224 10s., or to give security to the satisfaction of the Registrar on or before the 29th December, failing which the applicant to have possession of the house, the applicant not to be taken to have parted with his lien on the premises by remaining out of possession in the meantime.

After hearing counsel on the question of costs,

Hopley, J., said that the respondent seemed to have practically dispossessed the plaintiffs of their lien, and he must pay for having taken the law into his own hands. Costs of the application must be borne by the respondent.

RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS V. JOHN WALKER AND SONS.

Mr. Russell, on behalf of the defendants in the action, moved for a commission to take the evidence in London of John Walker and any other persons residing in the United Kingdom whose evidence might be deemed material for the defence in the action brought by the Receivers of the C.G.R. against John Walker and Sons in regard to the transfer of certain property. Certain litigation was pending between deponent and Mr. Arnold Hills in London, and it was desirable that deponent should attend the hearing of the action.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the respondents), read an affidavit by Mr. Syfret, one of the plaintiffs in the action, who urged that it was of the utmost importance that the said John Walker should be examined before the Supreme Court in Cape Town. The joint venture was entered into in this colony. The defendant had entered a claim in reconvention, and it was highly desirable that the evidence of John Walker should be given in this colony, where the books and agreements were kept. Deponent intimated that he would have no objection to evidence being taken on commission of persons to whom it was alleged payments of interest on debentures had been made by defendants.

Mr. Russell read an answering affidavit by Thomas Cameron Walker (son of the defendant John Walker), stating that his father was not in robust health by any means, and was unable to withstand the heat of the Cape summer.

After hearing counsel in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said that no order would be made upon the present application.

It seemed to him not only very desirable that Mr. Walker should be present personally at the trial here, but he should think it very undesirable that he should be absent. It was necessary that the defendant should attend, even at some little inconvenience to himself to help the Court to unravel this tangle which had largely been brought about by his acts. As to the other witnesses, he thought that if the names of such witnesses were obtained and submitted to the other side there would probably be no difficulty in the way of a commission taking their evidence. Leave would be reserved to the applicant to mention the matter to a judge in chambers. Costs of the present application would be borne by the applicants.

VAN DER HORST V. COLEY.

Interdict—Action for declaration of rights.

Where the applicant declared his intention to bring an action for declaration of rights forthwith; the Court granted an interdict to restrain the respondent from transferring certain immovable property.

This was a motion for an interdict to restrain the respondent from passing transfer of the whole or any portion of the estate Rustenburg, at Rondebosch, to the Hon. J. L. Bradfield, pending the completion of a lease under which the applicant had the option of purchasing for the sum of £4,000. Applicant, in his affidavit, said that in response to an advertisement in the "Cape Times," he entered into negotiations with the respondent to take the property. The respondent then was about to vacate the premises. Deponent agreed to take the house for a period of six months from the 1st October, and was given an option of purchase within the currency of the lease for £4,000. Subsequently the respondent made overtures to him to limit the lease to a period of three months, as he had received an offer from the Hon. J. L. Bradfield to purchase the property, and had accepted the offer. The applicant sent to the respondent a form of lease, embodying the terms of the agreement they entered into, but this the respondent had not signed.

The answering affidavit of Arthur Coley, the respondent, denied that he had agreed to enter into a lease with the applicant for six months. He had offered the applicant a refusal. He had agreed to let the house to the applicant, but he did not agree to let him have an option of purchase.

A further affidavit by R. M. Nightingale, broker, Cape Town, was read.

Mr. Burton (for applicant) admitted that, in view of the conflict of evidence on the affidavits, it would be difficult to decide the point in dispute at the present stage; but in the meantime he submitted that the applicant had made out a prima facie case for an interim interdict. Mr. Van der Horst was prepared to at once institute an action for a declaration of his rights.

Sir H. Juta (for respondent), said he thought that the mistake made by the applicant was that he had confounded an option with a refusal. There must be a consideration for an option, and no consideration had been alleged by the plaintiff in this case. Counsel contended that the case was not one for an interdict; if Mr. Van der Horst had been given an option, then he had his remedy by way of an action for damages.

Mr. Burton having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J., said that, as far as he could see, the balance of probabilities seemed to be in favour of the applicant, and that the balance of convenience and equity lay in fixing the property down in its present position. The respondent would be interdicted from passing transfer of the property, pending the result of an action for declaration of rights to be instituted forthwith by the applicant, action to be heard if possible during the first week of February, and not later than the 1st March, and costs to abide the result.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

LAIDLAW, MACKILL AND CO. { 1904.
V. BAKER, BAKER AND CO. { Dec. 16th.

Removal of bar.

Mr. Burton moved for judgment under Rule 319, for £3,093 15s., goods sold and delivered.

Mr. Rainsford moved, on behalf of the defendants, for leave to remove the bar and file their plea, and also for security for costs. The defendants had a claim in reconvention, £1,031 6s., money paid, and £625 6s. 1d., damages for breach of contract, and £39 13s. 11d., storage of goods. Counsel read an affidavit by the defendants' attorney, W. G. Fairbridge, of the firm of Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, from which it appeared that the plaintiffs, who carried on business in Glasgow, Scotland, had tendered as security for the defendants' taxed costs the name of Mr. W. Lawson Browne, the local attorney of the plaintiffs. The defendants said that the security tendered was not such as they were bound to accept. Not only do they require security for costs, but also for counter-claim. Counsel objected to his learned friend reading certain annexures to the replying affidavit.

Mr. Burton read a replying affidavit by George Montgomery Walker, of the firm of Walker and Jacobsohn (the plaintiffs' Cape Town attorneys), from which it appeared that the dispute arose out of certain consignments of Laidlaw's Tobacco Extract from the plaintiff firm to the defendants' house at King William's Town. The transactions commenced in the early part of the present year. The plaintiffs first supplied 250 cases at 82s. 6d. a case, which were duly paid for. Afterwards various other consignments were sent, making a total of 1,000 cases, for which the plaintiffs said that defendants were still indebted to them. Deponent went on to say that, as to the allegations raised by the defendants in the correspondence that the goods were unmerchandise, it was denied by the plaintiffs that the goods were unmerchandise, although, if some of them now were, the loss was the defendants'. In May last, defendants had a survey made of the goods which they now said were unmerchandise, and although repeatedly asked to exhibit the reports and promising to exhibit the same, the defendants has as yet failed to do so.

[Hopley, J.: Surely it was wrong to put such statements on affidavit. The attorneys ought to know better than that.]

It is rather argumentative, no doubt.

[Hopley, J.: Surely he might wait for his counsel's mouth to put these facts forward. How can he swear to all this?]

Well, he says he "respectfully submits."

Mr. Burton concluded the reading of the affidavits, the deponent stating that the security offered was such as the defendants could reasonably claim.

Mr. Rainsford read an answering affidavit by Mr. W. G. Fairbridge, who said that, while he thought it was highly inconvenient at this stage, and he submitted that it was not desirable on an application to remove bar against pleading and requiring security for costs on the counter-claim, that he should attempt to traverse the affidavit of the plaintiffs' attorney, he annexed three survey reports. These reports, said counsel, were to the effect that the sheep dip supplied was of faulty quality, because the tins in which it was enclosed were faultily constructed.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J., said it did not seem to him that this was a case in which the defendants should be barred from pleading, and that the operation of the 319th rule should be directed to be put into force against them, because it was obvious, before the bar was taken out against them, that the defendants meant to defend the action. The attorneys were not letting the matter go by default, but were in correspondence for some time. It seemed to him that he must allow the bar to be removed, and the defendants would have leave to file their plea forthwith, so that the merits of the case could be proceeded with as soon as possible. But the defendants were not bound to plead or to take any steps which might increase the expenses of litigation, until they were satisfied that they had sufficient security, not only for their costs, but also for the payment of the claim in reconvention that they said they had against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs were foreigners, in the sense that they were not resident or domiciled in this colony, and under the rules of the Court anybody, not being domiciled in this country, who wished to bring an action against an inhabitant of this country, must give security for costs. It was admitted that the plaintiffs were liable to these rules, and that they must provide security for the defendants' costs and claim in reconvention; but the contention was raised on plaintiffs' behalf that the defendants were sufficiently secured by the stocks delivered to them by the plaintiffs which defendants still had in their possession. His Lordship went on to say that he did not regard security of that kind as sufficient, because it had already been alleged that a large proportion was in an unmerchandise condition, and then there was the danger of deterioration. He could not see, at the present stage, how it would be safe, in case the defendants succeeded, to rely upon the realisation of those stocks for any considerable amount of money. It appeared that the claim in reconvention was something like £600, and the costs of the action must also be taken into consideration. On the whole, he had come to the conclusion that, before the defendants were obliged to plead, the plaintiffs should find security in the amount of £1,000 to the satisfaction of the Registrar. The costs of the present application would abide the result.

NELSON V. NELSON.

Mr. Upington moved for an order committing the respondent for contempt of Court by reason of his non-compliance with an order given in July last in an action for divorce brought on the ground of malicious desertion. The order contained a direction to the present respondent (plaintiff in the original suit), to pay a sum of £3 a month to his wife for the support of each of the two younger children, who were placed in the custody of the wife. The respondent had failed to make any contribution under the order. Counsel read an affidavit by the applicant, Maud Nelson.

The respondent (who appeared in person) said that he was absolutely unable to pay the alimony. The divorce suit would cost him a deal of money. He was now earning £15 a month in the service of a firm of auctioneers.

Cross-examined: He was employed as managing clerk, but he simply received a salary, and had no commission. He had been attempting to raise money on two policies of life insurance, and was expecting to receive £20 to-day, on account of one of the policies. The surrender value of the other policy was £30. He would receive £50, of which amount £10 would go off on account of the unpaid premium, and another £10 to his solicitors. The final order in the present case was made in August, so that three months' alimony was now due. He was leaving his present employers at the end of this year.

By the Court: He owed bills to the amount of £205. These creditors were pressing.

[Hopley, J.: Not more pressing than the orders of this Court. You see, I may send you to gaol to-day or to-morrow. Your creditors could not send you to gaol by so rapid a process.]

In further reply to the Court, witness said that it was not on account of drinking that Behr and Co. had dismissed him; it was owing to the depression. He had been with the firm 18 or 20 years. Witness complained that he had not been allowed access to his children, as ordered by the Court.

Mr. Upington denied this allegation, and said that reasonable facilities had been offered to the respondent.

Hopley, J., advised the respondent to approach his late wife in a civil manner, and then, if he was not allowed access, he should inform the Registrar of the Court, so as to bring his complaint before the notice of the bench.

Order granted as prayed, committing the respondent, to be suspended upon payment of £9 at 10 a.m. to-morrow (Saturday), at the office of the applicant's attorneys, Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton, and a further sum of £9, at a similar hour on Tuesday. Respondent to pay the costs of the application.

The respondent said that he would be unable to pay the sum of £18, as he had already given a note to his attorneys, promising to pay them £10 when he was paid for the policies.

[Hopley, J.: You should not give these. Your attorneys will have to give the note back to you. They must not get their money before your wife gets hers.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

IN CHAMBERS.

MOTION.

BACHELOR V. SOUTH AFRICAN { 1904.
CAN BREWERIES. { Dec. 23rd.

This was an application by the defendants in an action arising out of an East London building dispute, set down for hearing before a jury on the 10th January, for leave to take certain evidence on commission. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) was for the applicants; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent (plaintiff in the action).

The matter had previously been before the Court, and had been ordered to stand over pending production of a certain affidavit (14, C.T.R., 938).

Mr. Upington moved for a commission to take the evidence of Alfred Letellier, until lately the defendants' manager at East London. He read an affidavit by Letellier stating that the Court had fixed the 10th January for the hearing of the action. Deponent was the witness referred to in one of the affidavits filed on behalf of the defendants. He was at present out of employment, and might be leaving the country at any time. At present he had no prospect of anything to do, and he contemplated leaving this country before the 10th January.

Mr. Gardiner said that plaintiff strongly opposed the application, as they wished to have an opportunity of cross-examining Letellier in open court. The effect of reading evidence taken on commission was not the same as when the witness was cross-examined before a jury. Counsel contended that it had not been shown that Letellier was going to leave the Colony before the date of trial.

Mr. Upington said that defendants' position was that they had no control over this man. He might go at any moment, and he wouldn't communicate with them. His evidence was important, and unless taken on commission, there was a danger that they might lose it.

Hopley, J., said that what he felt was that it would be a hardship upon defendants if, by the refusal of this application, they were deprived of Letellier's evidence. If the man were still in town, no doubt he would be produced at the trial?

Mr. Upington: Yes; it is only a commission de bene esse.

Hopley, J.: I will grant a commission on condition that, if the man is still in the country and is available, he will be produced at the trial, the Commissioner to be Mr. Giddy, K.C., costs to abide the result.

INDEX OF TITLES IN THE DIGEST.

	PAGE		PAGE
Aboriginal Native	720	Amendment of (election) re-
Abrogation of law	724	turns	79
Accommodation note	893	Ante-nuptial Contract... ..	381
Accomplice	505	Applicant for liquor licence...	882
Account... ..	249, 827	Arbitration... ..	169, 428, 607
Act 15 of 1856	597	Arbitrator... ..	827
" 20 of 1856	312	Architect	109, 268, 747
" 19 of 1861	261	Articled Clerk... ..	27, 765
" 19 of 1861 and 19 of 1877	316	Assignment	510
" 18 of 1864	943	Attachment	509
" 18 of 1873	117	Attorney 223, 233, 341, 496
" 8 of 1879	369	836,	890
" 9 of 1879	389	Auctioneer	419
" 39 of 1879	865	Award	165
" 6 of 1882	169
" 27 of 1882	301	Bailment	608, 980
" 28 of 1883	400, 724	Belligerent	998
" 38 of 1884	21	Beficial Occupation	369
" 43 of 1885	1005	Bequest	157
" 44 of 1885	999	Blasting	653, 1018
" 27 of 1887	999	Bona fide defence	946
" 42 of 1887	999	Bond	489, 769, 794
" 28 of 1889	732	Boy... ..	1005
" 5 of 1890	297, 303, 991	Breach of contract	69
" 19 of 1891	231	Breach of lease	236
" 23 of 1891	783	Bribery... ..	646, 949
" 25 of 1891... ..	365, 307	Broker	266, 583
" 34 of 1891	483	Brokerage	276, 982
" 25 of 1892	93, 360	Brothel	987
" 36 of 1893... ..	199, 565	Building Contract 109, 158,
" 20 of 1894	732	326, 433, 624,	712
" 22 and 25 of 1894 ...	305, 307	Building Loan	55
" 28 of 1896	241	Burial ground	482
" 30 of 1899	193
" 38 of 1899	906	Cancellation 236, 320, 382,
" 26 of 1902	12	489,	644
" 36 of 1902... ..	429, 646, 987	Cape Town Municipality...	197
" 47 of 1902	247	Capital and Interest	794
Action	229	Cattle... ..	531
Acts of Regular Warfare	118	Cession... ..	220
Ademption	755	Children	687
Administration	16	Circumstantial evidence	651
Administrator	78	Civil imprisonment	779, 794
Admission... ..	341, 765	Claim in reconvention	35
Adulteration	297, 303, 991	Closing time... ..	600
Adultery	700	Collateral agreement	589
Agency	266, 691	Coloured people... ..	569
Agent ... 328, 418, 610, 691	982	Commission	671, 701
Alien	247	Common wall	180
Amended Title	389	Company... 93, 360, 492, 551,	918
Amendment of Plea	402	Composition	438, 927

	PAGE		PAGE
Conditional purchase	144	False pretences	989
Conditions of sale... ..	84, 419	Fees	296
Consensus ad idem	276	Fixtures	206
Consideration 115, 408, 823,	927	Foreign executor	18
Contempt of Court... ..	988	Forfeiture	39
Construction of Contract	680	Forum citandi	9
Construction of Will	200	Foreign Company	534
Consortes litis	704	Fraud	640, 927
Continuous service	27, 496	Fraudulent insolvency	800
Contract ... 5, 346, 439, 753,	870	Freight	563
Copyright	97	Friendly Societies... ..	607
Costs... ..	295	Funeral expenses	493
"Cover"	583
Criminal appeal... ..	833	Game... ..	598
Criminal law... ..	374	General dealer	302
Criminal responsibility	425	General denial	631
Cruelty to animals... ..	995	Grandchildren	687, 761
Culpable insolvency	21	Guarantee	72, 124, 975
Custody of children	74, 238
Curator	386	Harbour Board	351
Custom of trade... ..	439	Hotel... ..	923
Customs Duty	704	Hypothec	240
		Illegal evidence	398
Damages 322, 439, 661, 673,	728	Immovable property	294
Damnum injuriæ	546	Imperial Government... ..	586
Death of partner	20	Independent Contractor	35
Debentures	551	Indictment	785
Debtor... ..	548, 779	Injury to property... ..	629
Defamation 292, 362, 661, 669,	728, 978	Innocent misrepresentation	747
Defective premises	914	Insolvency 129, 140, 457, 510,	744, 901, 902
Delict	639	Interdict 229, 504, 571, 572,	653, 1018
Destruction of premises	369	Interim valuation	354
Discovery... ..	1016	Interpleader	204, 1001
Distribution	761	Interest	680
Divisional Council	355, 905	Irregularity... ..	476, 488, 507
Divorce... ..	169, 619, 814
Dock agent	535	Joint estate... ..	591
Donatio	408	Judgment... ..	216
Duress... ..	92	Judicial separation	814
		Jurisdiction ... 534, 565, 586,	946
Ejectment... ..	580, 714	Jury	783
Election (Parliamentary) 79,	949	Jus retentionis	675
Encroachment	135, 501
Engineer	201	Kafir beer	241
Equities	566
Estoppel	64, 610, 734, 879	Lamp	600
Evidence 195, 374, 487, 505,	632, 833, 1000	Land beacons	389
Exceptions 491, 586, 631, 785	861	Landlord ... 13, 309, 331, 589,	725, 914, 987
Excessive charges	176	Lashes	496, 1005
Executor	438, 591, 610	Law Agent	176, 781
Expenditure... ..	78	Lease	220, 382, 448
Expert	275	Leave to appeal	581, 945
Exposing for sale	398	Legacy	761, 775, 883
Extension of lease	725	Legislative Council... ..	12
Extras	326, 433, 624

	PAGE		PAGE
Lessor	240, 644	Nudum Pactum	408
Letting and hiring	916	Occupation	883
Liability of partner	237	Onus of proof	1003
Libel	581	Option	239, 823
Licence	197, 483	Ordinance 72 of 1830... ..	506
Licensing Court	215, 822	Ordinance 6 of 1843	21, 742, 744
Lien	675, 900	Ordinance 15 of 1845	132, 617
Liquidated claim	244	Owner... ..	605
Liquidated damages	39
Liquidation	87	Pactum de non petendo	317
Liquor laws	195, 487, 650	Partnership 20, 97, 237, 249, 393, 457, 574,	601
Liquor licence... 304, 305, 307, 400, 569, 600, 994,	999	Party wall... ..	180, 185
Living on earnings of prostitution	646	Patent defect	975
Loan	608	Pauperies	720
Locatio operis	606	Payment... 288, 357, 438, 472,	819
Loss of goods	808	Pension	902
Lunatic	386	Perjury	507
		Personal injury 458, 576, 894,	898
Magistrate, 244, 295, 316, 476, 491, 651, 652,	1001	Personation	949
Mahommedan marriage	74	Penalty... ..	39
Malicious arrest	946	Peritia artis	747
Malicious desertion	619	Petition	83, 148, 231
Mandate	418	Plans	201
Marriage of Natives	225	Pleading	581, 631, 718, 995
Master and Servant, 69, 117, 204, 297, 504, 546, 597,	639	Police offences	301
Measure of damages	135	Power to sue... ..	492, 973
Medical Council... ..	483	Practice	714
Medical practitioner	296	Pre-emption	408
Messenger of Court	322, 509	Preference... ..	551
Mining Ordinances	171	Prescription	614
Minor... ..	425	Presentment	691
Misconduct... ..	621, 753	Previous conviction	496
Misjoinder	939	Principal and agent 288, 370, 472, 858, 879,	909
Misrepresentation	704	Principal and surety... ..	680
Mistake	563	Procedure... ..	671
Monument	493	Promissory note... ..	357, 691
Mortgage	30, 62	Promotor	851, 995
Motion	580	Proof	296, 301
Municipal... ..	241, 401, 838, 948	Provisional sale... ..	328
Mutual will	157, 392	Provisional sentence 318, 377, 485, 566, 632,	772
		Purchase and sale	271, 861
Native area	724
Native Territories	980, 989	Qualifications	781
Native Succession	943	Quanti Minoris	609, 975
Natives	193	Quantity surveyor	393
Native law	238
Native reserve	905	Railway	261, 563
Negligence	980	Rebel	118, 998
Negotiable instrument... ..	64	Receipt	397
Net price	260	Receivers	87
Non-joinder	861	Rectification of register	404
Notice	370, 507, 815	Registration	381, 614
Novation... ..	85, 851	Release	396
Noxal action... ..	720	Remit... ..	312

	PAGE		PAGE
Removal of Bar...	1019	Stock Theft ...	1506
Removal of building ...	136	Subletting ...	331
Removal of trial ...	228, 783	Subscription dance ...	305
Rent... ..	236, 240, 504	Subsidence ...	165
Repudiation of contract ...	38	Substitution... ..	593
Res religiosa	482	Succession (Native)... ..	225
Resident Magistrate	306, 945, 946	Surety	318, 334, 981
Restitutio in integrum	591
Restitution of conjugal rights	131	Tacit agency	370
Retail sale (of liquor)... ..	650	Tacit agreement... ..	351
Return of goods... ..	754	Theft	728, 997
Review	220, 398, 488	Time limit	658, 712
Right to land	247	Trade-mark	404, 616
Right of Way	320, 946	Trading	302, 699
Right to occupy land... ..	308	Transkei	635
Rule of Court No. 8	939	Treason	118
		Trespass	571, 673
Sale and purchase	105, 115,	Trust funds... ..	590
144, 206, 328, 432, 502,		Trustee	901, 973
606, 609, 658, 729, 752,
754, 870, 875,	923	Ultra vires	635, 948
Sale by auction... ..	239	Undue preference	129, 140,
Sale of bequeathed property...	755	510, 742,	744
Sale to Non-combitants	699	Usufructuary... ..	78
Salesman	621
Sanitation	401	Valuation Court	220
Scab Inspector	732	Verbal injury	728
Scots' Law Agent	890	Verbal lease... ..	879
Security	448	Verbal revocation	72
Seller and purchaser	35	Vesting	761
Sequestration	83, 148, 790	Voluntary payment... ..	92
Servant	621	Voluntary winding-up ...	93, 216
Service of Articles... ..	836
Service of stallion... ..	407	Wages... ..	546
Service short	61	Waiver... ..	205, 916
Service of minors	5	Warranty	303, 609
Servitude... ..	180	Water	214, 865
Set off... ..	244	Whipping... ..	316
Shares	64, 271, 360, 583	Wholesale butcher... ..	296
Short delivery	827	Wholesale licence	307
Slander	138
Specific purpose	875	Will 16, 17, 18, 62, 132 200,
Spoliatio	1017	593, 671, 687, 761,	883
Spoor evidence... ..	864	Winding-up	360, 918
Stamp... ..	397	Witness	362, 988
Stay of execution	216	Wood-cutting	992
		Wrongful dismissal	204

DIGEST OF CASES.

VOLUME XIV.—1904.

	PAGE
Aboriginal Native, see Native area	720
Abrogation of law, see Pauperies	724
Accommodation note.
Warner & Co. v. Impey ...	893
Accomplice, see Evidence ...	505
Account, see Partnership...	249
see Arbitrator ...	827
Act 15 of 1856, see Master and servant	597
" 20 of 1856, see Remit to R.M.	312
" 19 of 1861—Railway bye-laws.
Where a man was convicted of having been found intoxicated on Railway premises, having been previously convicted of drunkenness some six times within the previous year, and had thereupon been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment: the sentence was reduced, on review, to one of 30 days' imprisonment or 40s. fine.
Rex v. Griman	261
Acts 19 of 1861, Sec. 15—Act 19 of 1877—Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction—Whipping.
Where a boy, aged 15, was accused of contravening Sec. 15 of Act 19 of 1861, and the case having been remitted to a Magistrate to try under his ordinary jurisdiction, was sentenced to be whipped.
Held, that as the boy was over 14, and this was a first offence,

	PAGE
the Magistrate could not, under his ordinary jurisdiction, inflict a whipping.
Rex v. Baartman	316
Act 18 of 1864, see Native succession	943
" 18 of 1873, see Master and servant	117
" 8 of 1879, Sec. 7, see Beneficial occupation	369
" 9 of 1879, see Land beacons	389
" 39 of 1879, see Water ...	865
" 6 of 1882, see Arbitration ...	169
" 27 of 1882, Sec. 14, see Police Offences	30
" 28 of 1883, Sec. 52, see Liquor licence... ..	400
" 28 of 1883, Secs. 21 and 22, see Native area	724
" 38 of 1884, see Culpable Insolvency	21
Acts 43 of 1885 and 35 of 1893—Stock theft—Lashes.
Where a charge of stock theft is remitted under Act 43 of 1885, the Magistrate cannot inflict lashes unless there is a previous conviction against the prisoner within the preceding three years.
Rex v. Korton and Others ...	1005
Act 43 of 1885, see Boy	1005
" 44 of 1885	} see Liquor Licensing Acts 305, 307 and Liquor Licence ... 999
" 27 of 1887
" 42 of 1887

	PAGE		PAGE
Act 28 of 1889, see Scab Inspector	732	Act 28 of 1896, see Municipal regulations... ..	241
Act 5 of 1890—Adulteration.		„ 30 of 1899, see Natives ...	193
The appellant had been charged in the Court below with selling adulterated vinegar. A small label on the cask from which the vinegar was drawn stated that it was "an artificially prepared fluid."		„ 38 of 1899, see Divisional Council	905
Held, that by reason of the small and inconspicuous type in which this notice was printed, the vendor was not exempted from prosecution under Act 5 of 1890.		„ 26 of 1902, see Legislative Council Election	12
Rex v. Torr	991	Act 36 of 1902—Application to compel Magistrate to take preliminary examination instead of proceeding with trial.
Act 5 of 1890, see Adulteration	297, 303	In an application to restrain a Resident Magistrate from proceeding with a trial for a contravention of one of the provisions of Act 36 of 1902, on the ground of the extreme gravity of the offence.
„ 19 of 1891, see Petition ...	231	Held, that as the Legislature has conferred the enlarged jurisdiction on the Magistrate's Court, the Supreme Court should not interfere to restrain the exercise of such enlarged jurisdiction.
„ 23 of 1891, see Jury	783	Rex v. Harris	429
„ 25 of 1891, see Liquor Licensing Acts	305, 307	Act 36 of 1902—Living on earnings of prostitution—Bribery—Interpretation of Statute.
„ 34 of 1891, see Medical Council	483	A public officer charged with the duty of prosecuting or detecting offenders who corruptly accepts money or other valuable consideration for refraining from the performance of such duty is guilty of an offence at Common Law, but is not liable to prosecution for living on the earnings of prostitution in contravention of the 33rd section of Act 36 of 1902.
„ 25 of 1892, see Companies' Act	93	Rex v. Charteris	646
„ 25 of 1892, Sec. 97, see Company	360	Act 36 of 1902, see Brothel ...	987
„ 35 of 1893 — Constructive possession—Evidence.		„ 47 of 1902, see Alien... ..	247
Rex v. Paul	199	Action, see Interdict	229
Act 35 of 1893—Jurisdiction of Circuit Courts.		Acts of regular warfare, see Treason	118
While increasing the jurisdiction of Magistrates, Act 35 of 1893 in no way reduces that of judges in respect of punishment for offences committed under the Act.		Ademption, see Legacy	755
Rex v. Botha... ..	565
Act 20 of 1894, see Scab Inspector	732
„ 22 of 1894 } see Liquor Licen-
„ 25 of 1894 } sing Acts 305, 307

	PAGE
Administration, see Will ...	16
Administrator—Removal.
Beyers v. Gronewald ...	78
Admission, see Articled clerk ...	765
see Attorney ...	341
Adulteration, see Act 5 of 1890...	991
Adulteration of foods—Pepper— Act 5 of 1890—Warranty.
The defendant, under a prosecution for a contravention of the 6th section of Act No. 5 of 1890, in selling pepper, with which ground olive stone had been mixed, proved that he had bought the pepper, in tins, from L., of Cape Town, and that on the tins was a label of the manufacturers, warranting the pepper to be genuine.
Held, that there was no such "written warranty" from the person from whom the defendant had bought the pepper, as is required by the 29th section of the Act
Rex v. Miller ...	303
Adulteration of foods—Vinegar— Act 5 of 1890—Master and servant—Fraud.
The defendant's servant sold as vinegar a liquid in a cask, from which he was authorized by the defendant to sell vinegar. The certificate of the analyst under the 27th section of Act 5 of 1890, was to the effect that the liquid was composed of 100 parts of vinegar and 17 of water added, and that the original vinegar had been adulterated by the addition of 17 parts of its weight in water. No application was made at the trial of the defendant before the Magistrate for the cross-examination of the analyst.
Held, that the defendant was responsible for the sale by his servant, and that, although he had not been guilty of fraud, he was liable under the 6th section of the Act.
Rex v. Fish ...	297

	PAGE
Adultery—Proof.
Glasgow v. Glasgow and another ...	700
Agency—Broker—Remuneration —Net price.
The plaintiff, a broker, learning that the defendant had a property for sale, inquired for what price he would sell, and was informed that the price was £12,000 net. The plaintiff introduced to the defendant a seller, who had, however, been previously introduced by L., another broker, and the sale was ultimately effected through the agency of L. for £12,000.
Held, that even if the plaintiff could be regarded as the defendant's agent, and as the person, through whose agency the sale was brought about, he could not claim any remuneration, inasmuch as the only authorized price was £12,000 net.
Cohen v. Rawbone ...	266
Agency, see Promissory note ...	691
Agent, see Mandate ...	418
Agent's authority, see Sale and purchase ...	328
Agent, see Executor ...	610
Agent — Commission — Payment by cheque.
The defendant had instructed plaintiffs (a firm of auctioneers) to find a purchaser for his farm. Plaintiffs introduced one L., who agreed to purchase for a certain sum, and tendered a cheque, which defendant accepted in payment. This cheque having been dishonoured, defendant refused to pay plaintiffs their commission.
Held, that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the customary commission.
Bam and Oliff v. Bloom ...	701

	PAGE		PAGE
Agent and principal—Brokerage—Referee.		where the parties reside, to interview the wife and report to the Court whether she understood the nature of the application and consented to it of her free will.
Saber v. Kansley	982	Ex parte Morum	381
Alien—Right to land—Act 47 of 1902—Certificate of Agent-General.		Applicant for liquor licence: right to be heard	882
The applicant entered into a contract in England with one S., an alien, under which S. engaged to serve him on arrival in the Colony at an adequate remuneration and for a reasonable period, and a certificate to that effect was given to S. by the Agent-General in terms of the 3rd section of Act 47 of 1902. On his arrival in the Colony, the Government refused to allow him to land, whereupon she applicant moved for an order, compelling the Colonial Secretary to authorize such landing.		Arbitration—Act 6 of 1882.
Held, that as, independently of the Act, an alien has no legal right enforceable by action to enter British territory, and that as the Act confers no such legal right on aliens, the applicant, as employer of S. was not entitled to the order prayed for.		The respondents had contracted to perform certain work for the applicants subject to the condition, inter alia, that should they fail to make such progress with the work as the town engineer deemed reasonable, the applicants should have the right to eject them and take possession of the works. The applicants did so eject them and the respondents having insisted on referring the question as to whether they had made reasonable progress to an arbitrator selected by themselves, the Court granted an order, restraining them from proceeding with the arbitration.
Raner v. Colonial Secretary	247	Suburban Municipal Waterworks v. Cochrane and Cherry	169
Amended title, see Land beacons	389	Arbitration, see Friendly societies	607
Amendment of plea—Commission de bene esse .		Arbitration—Order of Court.
De Wet v. Bloom	402	Levy v. Lazarus	428
Amendment of Returns, see Election expenses...	79	Arbitrator — Account — Plant — Short delivery.
Ante-nuptial contract—Registration—Free consent of wife.		The plaintiff, a Dock agent, sued the defendants for certain sums said to be due in respect of plant sold by him to the defendants, and also in respect of goods short delivered and delivered in a damaged condition by the defendants. The defendants denied purchase of certain portions of the plant named in the declaration, and also that the plaintiff had incurred the liabilities referred to in his declaration by reason

	PAGE
of any negligence or misfeasance on their part, beyond a certain sum already assessed by an arbitrator, which sum they now tendered. By agreement of parties the question of all claims in convention was referred to arbitration.
Defendants claimed certain sums in reconvention on their own account, and also certain other sums on behalf of certain clients.
Held, that all claims on their own behalf, and also all claims on behalf of clients from whom they held powers of attorney, and none other should also be submitted to arbitration.
McKenzie v. Table Bay Harbour Board	827
Architect's fees, see Building contract	109
Architect—Levels—Negligence.
Rivas v. Black	268
Architect—Quantity surveyor—Innocent misrepresentation—Peritia artis—Privity of contract.
W., a building owner, had employed the defendant, an architect and quantity surveyor, to take out certain quantities for a building he had commissioned plaintiff to erect. The defendant's estimate fell far short of the quantities which were actually required, but plaintiff had accepted defendant's estimate as correct, and in consequence made a tender for the erection of the building, which involved him in loss. This loss the plaintiff now sought to recover by way of damages from the defendant.
Held, that as there was no privity of contract between plaintiff and defendant, the former could not recover.
Semble: (1) That an innocent misrepresentation made by a person who is under no

	PAGE
legal obligation to make any representation affords no ground of action. Tait v. Wicht (7 Juta 156).
(2) Every professional man spondet peritiam artis and is liable to any person who employs him for loss arising from his innocent misrepresentations.
Skippon v. De Witt	747
Articled clerk—Admission.
An articled clerk, who had served over two years and nine months to an attorney of the Supreme Court, who was practising in S. Rhodesia, was allowed to complete his period of service with an attorney at Cape Town.
Ex parte McLeod	765
Articled clerk—Continuous service.
Where there had been two or three breaks in the continuity of service of Articles, amounting in all to four months: the Court condoned these breaks, but ordered that the applicant should complete four months' extra service, although he had already served five years, and during one of the breaks had been employed by his principal in the management of a branch office.
Ex parte Kilfoil	27
Assignment, see Insolvency	510
Attachment of property, see Messenger of Court	509
Attorney—Culpable insolvency—Suspension.
An attorney who had been convicted of culpable insolvency and sentenced to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour, was suspended from practice sine die: but with leave to apply for restoration after one year.
Law Society v. Greening	223

	PAGE		PAGE
Attorney and Notary—Appointment of extra Colonial examiners.		period of five months should be served. Per incuriam, a copy of certain new articles entered into was not sent to the Registrar of the Court until more than three months had elapsed after execution. The Court also condoned this irregularity.
Ex parte Edwardes ...	233	Ex parte Bell ...	496
Attorney—Articles—Service outside this Colony—Admission in this Colony.		Auctioneer's commission, see Conditions of sale ...	419
The applicant was duly articulated as clerk to an attorney of the Supreme Court practising in Rhodesia, and was by him instructed in the knowledge of the law for three years. He then removed to Cape Town for the purpose of being further instructed and preparing for the Law examination, and obtained from the Divisional Court an order directing that "fresh articles be entered into with an attorney in this Colony for a year's service, and that the time of service in Rhodesia be allowed to count for the purpose of being admitted by the Supreme Court.		Award of arbitrators—Stay of execution.
Held on appeal, that there was no ground for disturbing the decision of the Divisional Court.		Federal Supply Co. v. Buffalo Supply Co. ...	165
Law Society v. McLeod ...	836	Bailment—Tender to re-deliver—Consignment—Negligence.
Attorney—Scots' Law Agent in Sheriff Court—Admission.		The plaintiff delivered a bicycle to the defendant for the purpose of having it fitted with new tyres. A dispute afterwards arose between them as to whether the plaintiff should pay for the work before or after the tyres had been fitted. The parties not being able to agree, the defendant told the plaintiff to remove the bicycle as it was, but the plaintiff refused to take it without the new tyres. The defendant remained in possession of the bicycle, but on removing to new premises, he left the bicycle on the old premises, to which strangers had access. The bicycle having been removed by one J., the plaintiff sued the defendant. The plaintiff brought an action for damages for non-delivery.
Ex parte Davidson ...	890	Held, that the offer by the defendant to re-deliver the bicycle did not relieve him from the obligation of taking due care of it.
Attorney—Admission—Registration of articles.		Rudiger v. Muller ...	980
Where a clerk had duly served articles, these articles, owing to a misunderstanding not having been registered, the Court granted leave for the applicant's examination and ordered the articles to be registered; the registration to date back to the date when the service commenced.		Bailment, see Loan ...	608
Ex parte Simpson ...	341	Basis of Municipal valuation, see Interim valuation ...	354
Attorney—Continuous service.		Belligerent rights, see Rebel ...	998
The Court condoned a breach of continuous service where the applicant had been absent for five months on Military service, on condition that a further

	PAGE
Beneficial occupation — Destruction of premises—Act 8 of 1879, Sec. 7.
Act 8 of 1879, Sec. 7, does not apply to cases in which buildings have been destroyed by fire or other unavoidable misfortune, and hence in such cases a tenant is liable for the rent of such buildings only in respect of the time during which he has had beneficial occupation.
Salisbury Building Co. v. British S.A. Co. ...	369
Bequest—Mutual will—Portions payable to daughters.
A husband and wife, by mutual will, bequeathed to their sons certain land, on condition that they should one year after the death of the survivor pay certain portions to their sisters, and that the testators should retain their full rights over the said land during their lives. The testatrix died, and the survivor relinquished his rights under the will. The respondents obtained transfer and claimed the right to alienate the land without first paying or securing the portions of their sisters.
Held, that the sisters were entitled to an interdict, restraining such alienation.
Ex parte Weyers ...	157
Blasting, see Interdict ...	653, 1018
Bona fide defence, see R.M. Court	946
Bond—Interest— Pactum de non petendo .
Pedersen v. McKay ...	769
Bond—Capital and interest—Payment of interest.
A mortgage bond passed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff contained a proviso that the capital should not be called up for five years, provided that the interest be duly paid as it falls due. After the passing of the bond, an

	PAGE
arrangement was entered into between the parties that the interest should be paid at the office of H., who was the legal adviser of both. The first instalments of interest were duly paid at such office and received by the plaintiff, but on a further instalment falling due, the defendant failed to pay the actual sum at the office, but he had made an arrangement with the attorney for the payment of the amount on his behalf on demand by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, however, did not apply at the office of H. for payment, and sued the defendant for capital and interest, on the ground of failure to pay interest when due.
Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim payment of the capital.
Parkin v. Spies ...	794
Bond—Cancellation—Costs.
The plaintiff had entered an action for the cancellation of a certain bond. The bond had been passed before any money was paid over to the defendant. The Court ordered the cancellation of the bond; but as the matter could have been determined by motion, ordered the plaintiff to pay costs.
Ashman v. Van Ellewee ...	489
Boy — Magistrate's jurisdiction under Act 43 of 1885.
A Magistrate cannot sentence a first offender if remitted under Act 43 of 1885 to a flogging if over the age of 14.
Rex v. Sam Wilson ...	1005
Breach of condition of lease, see Rent ...	236
Breach of contract, see Master and servant ...	69
Bribery, see Election petition ...	949
Bribery, see Act 36 of 1902 ...	646

PAGE	PAGE
Broker—Shares—"Cover"—Damages.	Held, that there was sufficient proof of knowledge on the defendant's part to support a conviction of keeping a brothel after such notice.
The plaintiff bought certain shares in companies through the agency of the defendant, a broker, the arrangement between them being that the defendant should retain the scrip until the price was paid, and that in the meantime, if the market price fell, the plaintiff should pay to the defendant the difference as "cover." The price fell, and the plaintiff from time to time paid sums as "cover." The price having fallen still lower, the defendant demanded further "cover," and as the plaintiff did not pay it, the defendant sold the shares under Stock Exchange regulations on account of the plaintiff.	Rex v. Eddries ... 987
Held, that the defendant, although bound to account for the sums received by him, was not liable in damages as for an illegal sale of the shares.	Building Contract—Breach—Penalty—Extras.
Karriem v. Harris ... 583	Raganalli v. Lipschitz ... 624
Broker, see Agency ... 266	Building Contract—Time limit—Damages.
Brokerage—Failure of broker to obtain purchaser on terms prescribed by principal—Consensus ad idem.	Harpur v. Fincham ... 712
Clark v. Macnamara... 276	Building contract.
Brokerage, see Agent and principal ... 982	Shutte v. Hedley Bros. ... 158
Brothel—Landlord—Knowledge—Act 36 of 1902.	Building contract—Bills of quantities—Architect's fees.
The appellant was the lessor of a house, the lessee of which was convicted of keeping a brothel therein. Notice of this conviction was given by the police to the defendant, and he was warned that if the house should continue to be used as a brothel he would be prosecuted for a contravention of the 24th section of Act 36 of 1902. The appellant took no notice of the warning, and the house continued to be used as a brothel.	Rowe v. Fisher ... 109
	Building contract—Extras.
	Tennant v. Zwaigenhaft ... 326
	Crombleholme v. Marks, Highman & Company ... 433
	Building loan—Mortgage.
	Allie and Others v. Porter and Barsdorf ... 55
	Burial ground, see Res religiosa ... 482
	Cancellation, see Bond ... 489
	" see Lease ... 382
	" of sale, see Right of way ... 320
	Cancellation of mutual liability see lessor and lessee ... 644
	Cancellation of lease, see Rent ... 236
	Cape Town Municipality—Licence.
	Under the Cape Town Municipal Act the Town Council is empowered to impose a licence duty for any vehicle drawn by any horse or plying for hire or profit.
	Held, that a cart and horses used by a building contractor for the purposes of his business are liable to the duty.
	Rex v. Benning ... 197

	PAGE
Capital and interest, see Bond ...	794
Cattle—Illegal Sale by Messenger. Pienaar v. Estate Sluiter ...	531
Cattle — Trespass — Illegal im- pounding. De Lange v. Theron ...	948
Cession, see Lease... ..	220
Children, see Will... ..	687
Circumstantial evidence, see Magis- trate's finding on facts ...	651
Civil Imprisonment see Debtor ...	779
Civil imprisonment—Application for release. Friedman v. Belman ...	794
Claim in reconvention, see Seller and purchaser	35
Closing time, see Liquor licence... ..	600
Collateral agreement, see Land- lord and Tenant	589
Coloured people, see Liquor licence... ..	569
Commission—Procedure.
A. having sued P. in an action which arose out of a certain prize fight, applied for a com- mission to take the evidence of P., who was about to quit the Colony.
Held, that no commission should be granted until the declaration (at least) has been filed.
Austin v. Palmer and others	671
Commission, see Agent	701
Common wall, see Party wall	180
Companies Act—Voluntary wind- ing up—Attachment—Inter- dict.
After the respondent had ob- tained judgment against a company, a resolution was duly passed and advertised for the voluntary winding up of the company. Notwith- standing such winding up, the

	PAGE
respondent claimed the right to attach property of the com- pany in execution of the judg- ment.
Held, that the Court had the power under the 186th section of the Companies Act, 1892, to restrain such attachment.
Liquidator of Bromley and Co. v. Shenker	93
Company—Winding up—Fraud on shareholders—Prejudice to creditors.
Where a voluntary winding up of a Company has been de- cided upon, the Court will not order a winding up by the Court at the instance of any creditor whose rights would not be prejudiced by such voluntary winding up, nor at the instance of any shareholder in the absence of proof that the proceedings in connection with the resolution for a volun- tary winding up have been conducted illegally or in such a manner as to constitute a fraud on such shareholder.
De Villiers and others, Marais and others, Executors Est. Russell v. False Bay Fish Co., Ltd.	918
Company—Power to sue.
Hack v. Dreyfus & Co.	492
Company—Winding up as insol- vent—Liability of share- holders, past and present— Act 25 of 1892, Sec. 97.
One T. had entered into a con- tract on behalf of a certain joint stock company with the defendant for the purchase of defendant's business, for which it was agreed that defendant should receive £100 in cash and 100 fully paid-up shares in the company. This pay- ment was referred to in the duly registered Articles of Association of the Company, but the contract for the issue of these shares to the defendant was neither reduced to writing nor registered. Thereafter the defendant disposed of 50 of his shares. Subsequently the Company became insolvent, and the trustee now sought to hold the defendant liable for the full value of the 100 shares originally issued to him.

Held, that as there was no evidence that the then holders of the 50 shares he had disposed of were not solvent, he could not be held liable as a past shareholder in respect of those shares.

Held further, that as he had neither paid the full value in cash for the 50 shares still held by him, nor had these registered in the manner provided by Sec. 97 of Act 25 of 1892, he was liable as a contributory in respect of these.

Liquidator of "Ye Mecoa Café" v. Webber ... 360

Company, see Debentures ... 551

Composition with creditors, see
Consideration ... 927

Compromise or Transaction, see
Executor ... 438

Conditional purchase, see Sale and purchase ... 144

Conditions of sale.

The defendant had purchased certain property for £6,000 odd subject to the condition that a Trust Company should advance £5,000 on mortgage on the property purchased, and further £1,000 on certain other property of the defendant. The defendant alleged that the Trust Company subsequent to the sale demanded additional security for the advance of £5,000. This security he refused to provide. Part of the purchase price of the property had been paid by defendant, but a balance of £840 still remained due, and for this sum the plaintiff now asked for provisional sentence.

Held, that provisional sentence must be granted as prayed, with costs.

Kets v. Noorden ... 84

Conditions of sale—Auction sale —Auctioneer's commission.

One of the conditions read at an auction sale of lots of land was that "the purchaser shall pay the auctioneer's commission." Certain lots were knocked down to the defendant, who afterwards refused to sign the conditions, on the ground that he had never bought the lots. It having been proved that the defendant had bid for the lots after hearing the conditions read.

Held on appeal, that the Magistrate was right in giving judgment for the plaintiff in an action brought by the auctioneer to recover his commission.

Taylor and Gibson v. Behr & Co. ... 419

Consensus ad idem, see Brokerage 276

Consideration — Promise — Contract—Right of pre-emption —Nudum pactum—Donatio—Remuneratory donations.

The defendant, who owned a farm adjoining that of the plaintiff, on being pressed by the plaintiff to sell the farm, promised, that in the event of his wishing to sell the farm, he would give the plaintiff the first refusal. Thereafter the defendant sold the farm to E. without giving the plaintiff the first refusal, and E. resold the farm at a profit.

Held, that as the plaintiff had given or done nothing in return for the right of pre-emption, and had not even promised to buy at the price for which the defendant could sell to another purchaser, there was no valuable consideration for the promise, and that consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to damages for breach of contract.

	PAGE
Mtembu v. Webster...	408
Consideration, see Sale and purchase ...	115

Consideration—Illegal consideration—Composition with creditors—Fraud.

The defendant, being in difficulties, entered into an arrangement with his creditors, by which they agreed to accept five shillings in the pound. The plaintiff was a party to the arrangement, but after he had signed the deed of composition, he obtained a promissory note for the balance of the debt originally owing to him.

Held, that there was no consideration for the note.

The plaintiff alleged that after the arrangement, at which he was present, had been made with the creditors, he changed his mind, and that he signed the deed on condition that the defendant should pass the promissory note for the balance of his claim.

Held, that as the plaintiff did not communicate his change of mind to the remaining creditors, the condition was a fraud on them and did not constitute a valid consideration for the note.

Cohen v. Hermann & Canard 927

Consideration—Offer—Acceptance—Revocation of offer—Option—Contract.

The declaration alleged that the defendant signed a document covenanting to give to the plaintiff the option to purchase certain property at a definite price within a limited time, and that within the time so limited the plaintiff notified to the defendant that he elected to avail himself of the option and was prepared to pay the price. The plea averred that there

	PAGE
was no consideration for the giving of the option by the defendant.
Held, that, even assuming that there was no consideration and assuming that the so-called "covenant" should be regarded as a mere offer, the acceptance of such unrevoked offer within the specified time created the requisite consideration and gave rise to a binding contract between the parties.
Scott v. Thieme ...	823
Contempt of Court. see Witness	988
Construction, see Will ...	200
Construction of Contract, see Principal and Surety ...	680
Consortes Litis, see Estoppel ...	704
Continuous service, see Articled clerk ...	27
Continuous service, see Attorney	496
Contract—Bricks—Custom of trade.
No alleged trade custom can be pleaded against the express terms of a written contract.
Peek Bros. v. Australian Brickfields, Ltd. ...	439
Contract—Installation of electric lift—Unskilful workmanship—Damages.
Thomson v. McKenzie & Co.	346

Contract—Sale and purchase—Preferent rights.

The defendants had contracted to supply the plaintiffs with a certain quantity of coal tar per annum at 2d. per gallon. The defendants further agreed to sell all their coal tar to the plaintiffs, over and above the quantity they were bound by contract to deliver at the same price, save and except such small quantities as they might sell to ordinary customers. They had disposed of considerable quantities of coal tar to a certain firm, and

	PAGE
the plaintiffs now sued for damages.
Held, that under this contract the Gas Company were entitled to supply only old customers and only with the quantity which had been supplied to them during the preceding twelve months.
B. S. A. Asphalte Co. v. Cape Town Gas Co. ...	870
Contract with parents, see Services of minors ...	5
Contract of service—Misconduct—Dismissal.
The plaintiff, who had been engaged by the defendant to perform the general duties of a clerk, either in the defendants' store or in the accounting office, used insolent language towards his superior, in consequence of which he received a month's notice, and was transferred from the store to the accounting office. Before the expiration of the month, the plaintiff flatly refused to perform the duties of a ledger clerk, upon which the defendant tendered him his salary up to that date and dismissed him.
Held, that the tender was sufficient and that the defendant was not bound to pay salary for the unexpired portion of the month.
Miles v. Jagger & Co. ...	753
Copyright — Plays—Award of arbitrators—Res judicata—Partnership.
Koenig v. Landeshut ...	97
Costs, see Magistrate's Court ...	295
"Cover," see Broker ...	583
Criminal appeal—Admissibility of evidence—Admission of the defendant's evidence taken under compulsion.
The appellant, who was an insolvent, was examined at the third meeting of his creditors

	PAGE
under the 7th section of Act 38 of 1884, and was subsequently charged before the Resident Magistrate with fraud and breach of trust. At the trial the proceedings in insolvency, including the evidence given by the appellant, was admitted as evidence and the appellant's depositions were read. The depositions had an important bearing in the case, for, without them, there was no reasonable certainty of conviction.
Held, that as substantial wrong was done by the admission of the evidence, the conviction should be set aside.
Rex v. Williams ...	833
Criminal law — Evidence — Indecent assault—Particulars of complaint made by female.
Where, on a trial for indecent assault or other kindred offence on a female, it appears that she made a complaint as soon, after the assault, as she met a person to whom she would naturally make a complaint or give an explanation of her condition, the particulars of her statement, so far as they relate to the charge against the accused, are admissible as evidence in corroboration of her evidence upon the main issue.
Rex v. Jenkinson ...	374
Criminal responsibility, see Minor	425
Cruelty to animals—Using lame horse.
Although working a lame horse is prima facie evidence of cruelty, such evidence is rebutted by proof that only gentle and beneficial exercise was given to the animal.
Rex v. Grant ...	995
Culpable insolvency—Ordinance No. 6, 1843—Act No. 38, 1884.
An insolvent failing to attend any one of the three statutory

	PAGE
meetings of his creditors may be convicted under the 71st section of Ordinance No. 6, 1843, of the crime of culpable insolvency. (Vorster v. Lilienfield, 5, E. D. C. Rep., p. 254, approved of.)
An insolvent was convicted of contravening the 71st section of the Insolvent Ordinance in having failed, when thereto required by the Master, to give a sufficient explanation of the causes of his insolvency. The evidence showed that it was the trustee, and not the Master, who had required the explanation. The Crown did not support the conviction, and the same was quashed.
The 10th section of Act No. 38, 1884, makes it culpable insolvency, when, on being required thereto in writing by the trustee, the insolvent fails to give a sufficient explanation, punishable under the 71st section of the Ordinance.
Rex v. Greening	21
Custody of children, see Mahometan marriage	74
Custody of illegitimate child, see Native Law	238
Curator, appointment of permanent, see Lunatic	386
Custom of trade, see Contract	439
Customs Duty, see Estoppel	704
Damages, see Contract	439
for wrongful execution sale, see Messenger of Court	322
see Defamation	661, 728
see Trespass	673
Damnum injuriæ — Measure of damages.
Honiball v. Cape Central Railway	546
Death of partner, see Partnership	20

	PAGE
Debentures—Company—Partnership—Preference—General bond.
A Company acting under the powers of its trust deed passed a bond in favour of certain trustees for debenture-holders, charging the whole property and assets of the Company (without describing any of such assets), with the condition that the Company reserved the power to deal with any property and assets, provided that the proceeds be placed to credit of capital and not to that of revenue account. Thereafter the Company ceded its assets to a partnership, which took over its liabilities. The Company was ordered to be wound up and receivers were appointed to realize and distribute the assets of the partnership.
Held, that the debenture-holders had no greater rights in respect of the assets of the Company than those of the holder of a general bond, and that their rights under the debentures did not include a preference against the assets of the partnership.
Debenture Holders of Grand Junction Railways and others v. Hill and others. Liquidator of Grand Junction Railways v. Hills and others	551
Debtor—Civil imprisonment.
Ex parte Bowers	779
Debtor and creditor—Liability for debts of predeceased spouse.
Gourlay, Cavanagh & Co. v. Davis	548
Defamation — Summons — Averment of publication.
In a summons for damages for defamation in a Magistrate's Court, it is not a sufficient averment of publication to allege that the defamatory words were contained in a

	PAGE		PAGE
letter written by the defendant addressed to a third person.		Discovery — Detailed statements of account.
Konigsberg v. Stanislaus and another	978	There is no rule of Court whereby a defendant can be compelled to disclose items on which a tender made by him is based.
Defamation—Unchastity.		Cape Times, Ltd. v. McKenzie & Co., Ltd.	1016
The defendant, knowing that the plaintiff passed as an unmarried woman, stated to several persons, who also believed her to be unmarried, that she had a son by one M., and was married to him.		Distribution, see Will	761
Held, that the statement, if false, was defamatory.		Divisional Council—Native Reserve—British Bechuanaland Proclamations 29 of 1887, 148 and 432 of 1896—Act 38 of 1899—Ultra vires.
Knoesen v. Theron	292	The Divisional Council of M. was constituted and its boundaries defined by B.B. Proclamation 29 of 1887, which provided that no Divisional Council should have jurisdiction within any native reserve. Boundaries of the several fiscal divisions of B.B. were fixed by Proclamation 148 of 1896 and the Molopo native reserve, of which the Stad Mafeking forms a part, was thereby included in the division of M. By Proclamation 432 of 1896, the division of M. was divided into six districts, within none of which the Molopo reserve fell. The Magistrate held that the Stad M. nevertheless fell under the jurisdiction of the Divisional Council of M. by Act 38 of 1899, and that the Council had, therefore, power to impose a dog tax within the said Stad.
Defamation—Damages.		Held on appeal, that as the Divisional Council of M. depended for its local jurisdiction on Proclamation 432 of 1896, and as the Stad M. does not fall within any one of the six sub-divisions of the division of M., the Council has no jurisdiction within the Stad and the imposition of a dog tax therein was consequently ultra vires of the Council.
De Biasio v. Harrison	669	Rex v. Montsiosa	905
Defamation—Malay priest—Damages.
Du Toit v. Domingo	661
Defamation — Verbal injury — Theft—Damages.
The defendant made a statement to others that the plaintiff had committed theft and qualified the statement by adding that the plaintiff had removed goods of his after they had been duly attached by the Messenger of the Magistrate's Court.
Held, that although such removal might not constitute theft in the proper sense of the term, yet that as it was, at all events, a dishonourable act, the statement was defamatory and constituted a verbal injury to the plaintiff.
Steenberg v. Cooper	728
Defamation, see Witness	362
Defective premises, see Landlord and tenant	914
Delict, see Master and servant	639
Destruction of premises, see Beneficial occupation	369

	PAGE
Divisional Council—Excavation in road—Negligence.
Brett and wife v. Divisional Council of Victoria West	355
Divorce—Domicile.
A petition for leave to sue for divorce by edictal citation must state that the petitioner is domiciled in this colony. A mere allegation of residence is not sufficient.
Robertson v. Robertson	169
Divorce, see Malicious desertion...	612
„ see Judicial separation	814
Dock agent—Purchase of plant by Harbour Board.
McKenzie v. Table Bay Harbour Board	535
Donatio, see Consideration	408
Duress of goods, see Voluntary payment	92
Ejectment—Motion.
B. had purchased certain land from the applicants, had sued them for transfer, and the applicants were ordered to give transfer, or in the alternative, to pay B. £500 damages. They paid the money, which was accepted by B. B., however, remained in possession of the land, as it had never been registered, either in the name of F. or of the applicants. On a motion for the ejectment of B.,
Held, that an order must be granted as prayed.
Estate Faure v. Van der Byl	580
Ejectment Motion, see Practice	714
Election petition—Sub-agent—Bribery—Personation—Treating—Paying travelling fares.
Ex parte Fremantle	949

	PAGE
Election expenses—Amendment of returns.
Ex parte Zachary Stanley Bayley and others	79
Encroachment on neighbouring land—Removal of building—Measure of damages.
Where a building which encroaches on neighbouring land has been erected without protest from the owner of the land encroached upon and has stood for a year or more without the owner of such land demanding its removal, it is not the practice of the Court to order it to be removed, but to award damages to the person damaged. In estimating such damages, the Court will not look merely to the value of the land occupied by the encroachment, but will be guided by the loss which such encroachment has caused the owner of the land.
Stark v. Broomberg	135
Encroachment—Judgment in default of plea.
Van Boom v. Visser	501
Engineer—Plans—Fees.
Kilgour v. Sonnenberg	201
Equities, knowledge of see Provisional sentence	566
Estoppel—Misrepresentation—Fraud—Customs duty—Bonded warehouse—Costs—Pro rata liability—Consortes litis.
The first defendant B., being a bonded warehouseman at Port Elizabeth, received into bond 40 cases of cigars from W., who afterwards wishing to send them in bond by rail to Johannesburg, obtained from B. the cases and the rail-notes which B. had prepared for the carriage of the goods by rail. W. appropriated the cases with cigars to his own use, and brought 39 other cases to the Railway station, marked with

PAGE	PAGE
different marks, except one case, to which he directed the attention of the Railway officials, saying that it contained another case inside. The officials neglected to check all the marks and signed the Railway receipts which had been previously prepared by B. as being correct. The 39 cases were sent to Johannesburg, where there was no one to receive them, and on their being subsequently opened, they were found to contain only rubbish. The defendant B. being sued with two sureties on the bond which he had given to the Government for the due warehousing of all goods delivered into his warehouse, claimed as damages the amount of the loss sustained by him through the misrepresentation made by the Railway officials in the receipts signed by them.	Evidence — Accomplice — Ordinance 72 of 1830. section 12.
Held, that as the initial act which enabled W. to perpetrate the fraud was the delivery to him by B., of the cigars and rail-notes, the Government was not estopped from denying the correctness of the receipts which the Railway officials, induced thereto by the production of the rail-notes, had given to W.	Two prisoners having been convicted of the theft of an ox, gave evidence that the appellants, their fellow prisoners, had been concerned with them in the theft, and the appellants were convicted.
Held further, that on a simple prayer for costs, the plaintiff was not entitled to claim, that the costs be paid by the defendants jointly and severally.	Held, that as there was clear proof that the ox had been stolen, the evidence of the accomplices was sufficient to support the conviction of the appellants.
Colonial Government v. Bonner and others ... 704	Rex v. Matyolweni and Others ... 505
Estoppel, see Executor ... 610	Evidence, see Criminal law ... 374
„ see Verbal lease ... 879	Evidence, conflict of, see Provisional sentence ... 632
„ see Negotiable instruments ... 64	Evidence—Magistrate's finding.
Eviction, see Lease ... 448	Rex v. Robbie and Others ... 1000
Evidence of "Trap," see Liquor Licence ... 195, 487	Evidence, admissibility of, see Criminal appeal ... 833
	Exceptions, see Magistrate's Court 491
	„ see Indictment ... 785
	„ see Purchase and sale 861
	Exception, see Jurisdiction ... 586
	„ see Plea ... 631
	Excessive charges, see Law Agent 176
	Executor—Account—Joint estate—Inheritance—Discharge—Restitutio in integrum—Mistake.
	In an action brought by the applicant against the executors of his parents' joint estate, the Court declared that he was entitled to one-eighth of such estate, and reserved leave to him, in case he should not come to a settlement with the executors, to apply for an order, that the joint estate be realised for the purpose of ascertaining such eighth share. The applicant did come to a settlement with the executors and accepted

PAGE
	from them the sum of £1,000 in full discharge of his claim.
	Held, that it was no longer open to the applicant to take advantage of the leave reserved.
	Held further, that even if the matter had been reopened, or if the applicant had proceeded by way of restitutio in integrum, the fact that he had given the discharge with full knowledge of all the facts would have disentitled him to relief in the absence of fraud or any other ground of relief.
Budge v. Budge's Executors	591
Executor—Agent—Authority—Estoppel—Costs.
	The plaintiff having supplied goods to one B., who purported to buy them on behalf of the executor of P.'s estate along with goods bought by B. for the children of P., rendered an account to the executor, but there was nothing in the account to call the executor's attention to the fact that it included goods for P.
	Held, that the executor was not liable for goods supplied to B. after such account had been rendered to him.
Fryer v. Estate Petersen	610
Executor—Payment of debts—Compromise or transactio—Exception to plea.
	The plaintiff claimed from the estate of a deceased person the sum of £2,500, alleged to have been a debt owing by the deceased to the plaintiff. The defendant, as executor, disputed the debt, but afterwards compromised the claim by undertaking to pay a certain sum in annual instalments. In an action brought for payment of one of the instalments, the defendant pleaded that no debt was ever owing by the deceased, and that consequently nothing was owing under the compromise.

PAGE
	Held on exceptions to the plea, that an executor should pay only such debts as were actually owing by the estate, and the exceptions were consequently not allowed, but leave was reserved to the plaintiff to raise the question at the trial whether the compromise was for the benefit of the estate.
Van Heerden v. Estate Van Heerden	438
Expenditure on estate, see Usufructuary	78
Expert, see Negligence	275
Exposing for sale—Municipal market.
	A market agent, who had authority to sell goods out of hand, placed damaged vegetables, which he had for sale, in public view in the Municipal market.
	Held, that the vegetables were "exposed for sale."
Bex v. Johns...	398
Extension of lease, see Landlord and tenant	725
Extras, see Building contract	326, 433, 624
False pretences, see Native territories	989
Fees, see Medical practitioner	296
Fixtures—Sale and purchase—Damages—Quantum minoris—Acceptance—Waiver.
	The plaintiff bought a farm from the defendant at a public auction. At the time of the sale there was a kraal on the farm, which admittedly was included in the sale. Inside the kraal was a shed, the roof of which, consisting of corrugated iron sheets, screwed on to rafters, rested in front on poles fixed in the ground, and at the back on the stone wall of the kraal. The shed had been erected by a lessee, who was

	PAGE
still in occupation of the farm at the time of the sale, and who removed the shed after the sale, but before transfer. The plaintiff objected to the removal, but he paid the price and accepted transfer on the defendant's promise to put the matter right.
Held, in an action for damages for non-delivery of the sheds, that the action was not one of quanti minoris, and that consequently it was not prescribed in six months.
Held further, that the shed was a fixture forming part of the farm which the defendant, as vendor, was bound to deliver with the farm, and that failing such delivery, the plaintiff was entitled to damages.
Held further, that the acceptance of transfer under the above circumstances did not amount to a waiver of the defendant's right to damages.
The case of Irvine v. Berg (Buch. 1879, p. 183) distinguished.
Cairncross v. Nortje...	205
Foreign executor, see Will	18
Forfeiture, see Penalty	39
Forum citandi.
The Colonial Government may cite a defendant to appear in any Colonial forum.
Colonial Government v. Poole	9
Foreign Company—Jurisdiction.
Maisel Bros. v. Aronstain	534
Fraud on mortgage—Bogus receipt.
Mihaly v. Moskovik...	640
Fraud, see Consideration...	927
Fraudulent insolvency—Sale by insolvent— Bona fides —Consideration—Illegal seizure.
Y., a general dealer, sold his shop, fittings, good-will, &c., to one S. At the time of the

	PAGE
sale Y. was insolvent. The creditors of Y. thereupon attached his premises and such goods as they found. Thereupon S. claimed possession of the shop, restoration of the goods and damages. A jury found that the sale was not bona fide, and returned a verdict for the defendants.
In the second case, on the plaintiff's default, the Court granted absolution from the instance with costs.
Sooye v. Lawrence & Co. and others; For v. Lawrence & Co. and others ...	800
Freight—Mistake—Undercharge—Relief—Railway.
The defendants, on receiving a consignment of drums of extract of malt at B., which had been conveyed on the plaintiff's railway from P., paid the amount of freight charged by the railway official at B. The plaintiff subsequently discovered that the official had by mistake made an undercharge, and, before the defendants had in any way altered their position, the plaintiff demanded the difference. There was no evidence that the railway tariff book, by which the official had to be guided, was needlessly obscure, or that the official had been guilty of gross carelessness.
Held, affirming the judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the difference.
Cave's Brewery v. Colonial Government ...	563
Friendly societies—Settlement of disputes—Arbitration—Appeal.
The defendant Society was established under Act 7 of 1882, and was never registered under Act 5 of 1892. The plaintiff, a member of the Society, having made a claim

	PAGE
for sick pay, which the Society disputed, a special meeting of members was called in accordance with the rules of the Society, to settle the dispute. The meeting decided to pay part of the claim, whereupon the action was brought in the Magistrate's Court for the whole amount.
Held , that the 25th section of the Act of 1892 did not apply and that there was no appeal against the decision of the general meeting which had been properly convened for the special purpose of deciding the dispute.
Wilson v. Excelsior Benefit Society 607
Funeral expenses—Authority of executor to erect monument.
Treurnich and Wentzel v. Estate of De Villiers ... 493
Game Preservation Act—Notice by owner of land—Best evidence.
In a prosecution of the appellants before a Resident Magistrate's Court for contravention of the 7th section of Act 36 of 1886, a notarial certificate was produced to the effect that the prosecutor, being the owner of the land on which the appellants trespassed, had published in the A. newspaper, circulating locally, a notice, and warning that he was desirous to preserve the game thereon.
Held , that proof of the giving or publication of such notice and warning was indispensable, and that, as the best evidence had not been given, namely, the production of a copy of the newspaper, the conviction could not be supported.
Rex v. Enslin and Moll ... 598
General dealer, see Trading without licence 302
General denial, see Plea ... 631

	PAGE
"Going concern," see Hotel licence 923
Grandchildren, see Will ... 687, 761
Guarantee—Actio quanti minoris—Patent defect—Purchase and sale.
The plaintiff selected and bought several sheep out of the defendant's flock, and some of them were subsequently found to be infected with scab.
Held , that in the absence of any guarantee by the defendant that they were free from scab, he was not liable in the action, quanti minoris, and that, as he had no knowledge of the fact that the infection existed, he was not liable in damages for the expenses incurred by the plaintiff in dipping all the sheep by order of the scab inspector.
Muller v. Hobbs 975
Guarantee—Verbal revocation—Evidence.
Spilhaus & Co. v. Werner ... 72
Guarantee, see Purchase and sale 124
Harbour Board — Regulations — Ultra vires — Negligence — Tacit agreement.
The master of a ship in the Table Bay Docks, with full knowledge of the Harbour Board regulations, which stated that the Board would not be liable for any neglect of the masters or crews of the Board's tugs, engaged the services of two of its tugs to tow the ship out of the Docks. In the course of the towing, the ship was damaged through the negligence of the master and crew of one of the tugs. The acknowledged usage of the port was that no other tugs than those of the Board were allowed to tow ships out of Dock, and that the masters and crews of the tugs towing had to take their orders as to speed, direction, and so on from the master or pilot of the ship in tow.

	PAGE
Held, on a case stated by arbitrators, that the regulation was not on the face of it so unreasonable that the Court could, without any evidence that the regulation acted unfairly and without any statement to that effect by the arbitrators, declare the regulation to be ultra vires.
Held further, that the condition of the regulation should be deemed to have been tacitly incorporated with the contract by which the services of the tugs were engaged.
T. B. Harbour Board v. Bucknall S.S. Lines ...	351
Hotel licence—Sale and purchase —“Going concern”—Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 55.
B. purchased from N. “the lease, licences, goodwill, &c.,” of certain two hotels as “going concerns,” undertaking to relet the premises to N. for a term of years. B. now claimed absolute property in the licences.
Held, that N. had not sold the licences to B., but had only incurred the obligation of applying for a temporary transfer of the licences to B. under Sec. 55 of Act 28 of 1883.
Held further, that during the currency of his lease B. had no power to transfer the licences to other premises.
Nordon v. Bosman Powis & Co. ...	923
Hypothec, see Interpleader ...	240
Illegal evidence, admission and rejection of, see Review ...	398
Immovable property — Restrictions imposed on purchaser by vendor—Rights of subsequent purchasers.
Hattingh v. Robertson ...	294
Imperial Government, see Jurisdiction... ...	586

	PAGE
Independent contractor, see Seller and purchaser ...	35
Indictment — Exceptions — Rules of Court 63 and 64.
Where exception was taken to an indictment on the ground that it charged a prisoner with crimes of distinct species ;
Held, that the indictment (as it stood) was bad, and the Crown was put to election as to which class of charges it would prosecute.
Exception having been further taken that certain persons from whom the accused was said to have received bribes were not specified ;
Held, that these counts might be amended by the insertion of the necessary particulars.
Rex v. Charteris ...	785
Injury to property, see Negligence	629
Innocent misrepresentation, see Architect ...	747
Insolvency—Undue preference—Ordinary course of business—Ord. 6, 1843—Sec. 86 and 88.
Insolvent Estate Goldberg v. Bert... ..	744
Insolvency—Assignment—Undue preference.
Labe and Meyerowitz v. Paterson and De Heton ...	510
Insolvency, see Partnership ...	457
Insolvency—Undue preference—Contemplation of insolvency.
Estate of Olivier v. Van Zyl	129
Insolvent Ordinance—Undue preference—Usual and ordinary course of business.
Within six months of his insolvency, G., who was the agent in a country district of the defendant Insurance Society, paid to the Society the amounts of premiums which he had received on behalf of the Society during the preceding six days.

PAGE

The payment was made in presence of an inspector of the Society and by means of cheques given to G. by third parties.

Held, that the fact that the identical money received by G. from insured persons had not been paid over by him to the inspector did not constitute the payment an undue preference.

Held further, that the payment was protected as having been made in the usual and ordinary course of business.

Estate of Green v. South African Mutual Insurance Society ... 140

Insolvent — Pension — Trustee — Vesting.

The right to a monthly pension granted by a Harbour Board to an insolvent before his insolvency vests in the trustee of his estate for the benefit of his creditors.

In re Hansen... 902

Insolvent—Right of trustee—Request for maintenance of children.

A testator by his will bequeathed a third of a farm to his son C., and directed that C. should only enjoy the usufruct for the maintenance of C.'s children. After the testator's death, C. became insolvent, and the trustee sold to the applicant all the insolvent's right and title to the farm. The applicant, by motion, applied for ejectment of the insolvent, not even offering to maintain the children.

Held, that the applicant was not entitled to succeed.

Appel and Lipschitz v. Appel 901

Interdict—Action for declaration of rights.

Where the applicant declared his intention to bring an action for declaration of rights forthwith; the Court granted an interdict to restrain the respondent from transferring certain immovable property.

PAGE

Van der Horst v. Coley ... 1018

Interdict — Trespass — Prescription.

Estate De Jager v. Thyse... 571

Interdict — Action — Notice to third persons interested.

On an application by motion to restrain the respondents from supplying goods to N. in breach of an undertaking not to supply such goods to others than the applicants, it appeared that no notice of the application had been given to N., and that the respondents were quite able to pay damages for the alleged breach.

Held, that the applicants should proceed by action, giving notice thereof to N., to enable him, if so advised, to interrene as co-defendant.

British S. A. Asphalt Co. v. Cape Town Gas Co. ... 229

Interdict — Disposal of surplus funds collected for a specific object by public subscription.

Strydom and others v. Blignault and others ... 572

Interdict—Recurring grievance—Blasting operations.

The defendants carried on blasting operations in stone quarries on the side of a mountain immediately above the town of S. The work was done so carelessly that stones and large boulders were continually rolled down to the land below and to the neighbourhood of houses in the town. The plaintiffs being the Town Council of S., and the private owner of land immediately below the quarries continually protested, but no attention was paid to their protests until an application was made to restrain the work. On the hearing of the application, an interim interdict was granted to restrain the rolling of stones to the lower land.

Held, in an action for a perpetual interdict, that although since the previous application effectual steps had been taken for minimizing the risk, yet as the previous conduct of the defendants shewed that without an interdict there was reason for anticipating a recurrence of the grievance, the plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual interdict, restraining the defendants from working the quarries in such a way as to cause stones to roll down.

Estate Black and Simon's
Town Municipality v. Sir
John Jackson, Ltd. ... 653

Interdict—Rent.

The Court will not grant an interdict to restrain a tenant from removing his goods unless rent be actually due and unpaid.

Pinn v. Elliott ... 504

Interim valuation—Cape Town Municipality—Basis of valuation.

in making an interim valuation of properties under the 93rd section of Act 26 of 1893, the valuer acted upon the basis indicated by the solemn declaration required by the 88th section, and valued properties belonging to the applicant at the price which they would realise if brought to voluntary sale and not according to the amount actually expended on improvements.

Held, that the applicants' objection to this mode of valuation could not be sustained.

The valuer included properties which had not been improved since the previous valuation by the erection of new buildings or otherwise

Held, that this was a good ground of objection and was maintainable in the Supreme Court, although it had not been specially mentioned as a ground in the objection lodged by the applicant under the 92nd section.

Kaiser Bros. v. Cape Town
Town Council ... 354

Interpleader—Lessor and lessee— Rent—Hypothec—Delivery.

A lessee of premises, while indebted to the plaintiff as lessor for arrears of rent, entered into an arrangement, by which he sold to the claimant all his goods in the premises, but the sale was on long credit, and the lessee remained in occupation of the premises. The lessor obtained judgment, but upon proceeding to execution, the claimant claimed the goods as his. There was evidence to shew that the sale was a colourable arrangement to defeat the lessor's hypothec.

Held, that the Magistrate erred in giving judgment for the claimant, inasmuch as the plaintiff's hypothec could not be defeated by the arrangement, and that even if the arrangement had been made bona fide, the claimant ought not to have succeeded in the absence of proof of delivery of the goods to him.

Bapoo v. Mahomed ... 240

Interpleader—Onus of proof— Magistrate's inferences from facts.

The Court allowed an appeal in a case in which the Magistrate had based his judgment rather on his inferences from facts than on the facts themselves.

Vosloo v. Myburgh ... 1001

Interest see Principal and surety 680

Irregularity of proceedings, see
Review ... 488

PAGE

Irregularity of proceedings—Appeal—Notice of hearing—Review.

On an application for review of certain proceedings in a Chief Magistrate's Court, it appeared that the applicant had obtained judgment in his favour in a Magistrate's Court, and that the opposite party appealed to the Chief Magistrate's Court without any notice whatever to the applicant. The Chief Magistrate reversed the judgment.

Held, that the proceedings in the Chief Magistrate's Court should be set aside, and the appeal heard afresh after due notice.

Adonis v. Mketshane ... 507

Irregularity, see Magistrate's Court ... 476

Joint estate, see Executor ... 591

Judgment—Company—Voluntary winding up—Stay of execution.

The plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendant Company on a mortgage bond, but failed to inform the Court of the fact that the Company was being wound up voluntarily. Thereafter the defendant Company applied for a stay of execution.

Held, that a stay of execution should be granted, but on condition that the plaintiff's claim should be satisfied within a fixed period.

Bennett v. Cape Estate Syndicate Limited ... 216

Judicial separation—Divorce—Postponement—Practice.

Plaintiff had instituted an action for judicial separation, and now asked that the case should be postponed, in order to enable her to apply for divorce.

Held, that plaintiff must either apply for an amendment of the original rule nisi, calling upon defendant to show cause or else commence a new action ab integro.

PAGE

Cohoon v. Cohoon ... 814

Jurisdiction—Imperial Government—Exception.

In an action brought by the Cape Town Town Council against Colonel H., as representing the Secretary of State for War, for an order compelling him to remove certain fences placed by him around certain land claimed by the plaintiffs as a public recreation ground, the defendant excepted to the jurisdiction.

Held, that as the action was in reality against the Imperial Government, and as there had been no direction of His Majesty that right should be done in the matter, the Court had no jurisdiction.

Cape Town Council v. Colonial Government and others 586

Jurisdiction of Circuit Courts, see Act 35, 1893 ... 565

Jurisdiction, see Foreign Company 534

Jurisdiction, see R.M. Court ... 946

Jury—Act 23 of 1891—Removal of trial.

Where a trial by jury in a civil case has been demanded by either party, it is not competent for the Supreme Court to remove the case to trial on Circuit, and thus deprive litigants of their rights under Act 23 of 1891.

Peacock and others v. Bailey Friedman and Odendaal ... 783

Jus retentionis, see Lien ... 675

Kafir beer, see Municipal regulations ... 241

Lamp, see Liquor licence ... 600

	PAGE
Land beacons—Amended title— Act 9 of 1879.
Notice was duly given to the applicants in terms of the first proviso to the 4th section of Act 9 of 1879, that unless within thirty days after service thereof an objection were lodged with the Divisional Council to the boundaries adopted on re-survey, they would be deemed to have consented thereto, but the applicants failed, not inadvertently but deliberately to raise any objection within the time specified.
Held, that the applicants were not entitled to an order restraining the Surveyor-General from giving an amended title according to the said boundaries to the owners of the land on whose behalf such notice had been given.
Estate De Swardt and Others v. Surveyor-General and Others	389
Landlord, see Brothel	987
Landlord and tenant—Defective premises—Damage to goods.
Dedusey v. Osman	914
Landlord and tenant—Extension of lease — Evidence — Da- mages.
Hasseris v. Marks	725
Landlord and tenant — Rent — Collateral agreement.
Estate Rhodes v. Hartigan and others	589
Landlord and tenant—Holding over.
Duminy v. Day	309
Landlord and tenant — Sub-let- ting.
Kaiser Bros. v. Rosen	331
Landlord and tenant—Landlord's lien.
Hardy v. McSweeney	13
Lashes, see Previous conviction ...	496

	PAGE
Lashes, see Acts 43 of 1885 and 35 of 1893	1005
Law agent—Excessive charges.
Raffaele and Bellantone v. Bindemann	176
Law agent—Qualifications.
M., an ex-constable and a native, had applied to the R.M. of S. for enrolment under Act 20 of 1856 as a law agent. The applicant produced the necessary certificates as to character, but the Magistrate refused the application on the ground, inter alia, that the applicant's educational qualifications were insufficient.
Held, that a Magistrate has no power to insist on any educational or professional qualifications in any person applying to be enrolled as a law agent in his court.
Mayisela v. R.M. of Somers- et E.	781
Lease — Cancellation for non- payment of rent—Waiver of rights under lease.
Prince v. Myburgh	382
Lease—Eviction—Security.
The plaintiff sold his chemist's business to the defendants, one of the conditions being that the plaintiff would execute a lease of the premises in favour of the defendants for a period of five years, with a right of renewal for another five years. The defendants took possession of the business and occupation of the premises, but refused to join in the execution of the lease, on the ground that the plaintiff was himself lessee, and that under the terms of his lease he might at any time be evicted. The contingency was that the original lessor might die before the end of ten years, but she was proved to be of middle age and in good health.
Held, that there was no ground

PAGE

PAGE

for the defendants' refusal, but on the suggestion of the Court, the plaintiff offered security against eviction, and the defendants were accordingly ordered to join in the execution of the lease subject to such security.

Smiles v. Freedberg, Cohen & Co. ... 448

Lease—Pledge—Cession—Rights of cessionary.

The applicant ceded a sheep lease to L. as security for a debt. L. ceded all his rights to the respondent. Thereafter the applicant tendered the amount of the debt to respondent, who refused to hand back the lease, claiming the right to retain it as security for a promissory note made by the applicant which was not yet due.

Held, that whatever rights the respondent might have had if the applicant had himself ceded the lease to the respondent, he had not, as cessionary, any greater rights in respect of the lease than L. had, and that, therefore, he was bound to hand the lease back to the applicant upon tender by the applicant of the debt due by him to L.

Van der Heever v. Cloete ... 220

Leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Interlocutory order.

Ex parte Pam ... 581

Leave to appeal to Supreme Court,

see R.M. Court ... 945

Legacy—Ademption—Sale of bequeathed property.

A testator by his will bequeathed his farm J. to his son William, and his farms K. and L. to his sons Isaac and the plaintiff, subject to certain intricate fidei commissary substitutions. Attached to the bequest of the farms K. and L. was a direction to the effect that in case the testator should sell them and buy other ground in substitution for them, such other ground must be looked upon as bequeathed on the same stipulations as mentioned in regard to K. and L. The testator did sell farms K. and L., and he bought two other farms, one of which he gave in occupation to William and the other to the plaintiff, but there was nothing to connect the sale of the former with the purchase of the latter, or to bring such giving of occupation to two of his sons into relation with the direction in the will.

Held, that there was an ademption of the legacies.

Steyn v. Steyn and others ... 775

Legacy to a class, see Will ... 761

Legacy, see Will ... 593, 883

Legislative Council election—Accounts—Act 26 of 1902.

Even if a member is returned unopposed, he is bound to file an account of election expenses within 50 days.

Ex parte Gysbert Henry Stockenström, Paul Willem Michau, and Michiel Jacobus Pretorius ... 12

Lessor and lessee, see Interpleader 240

Lessor and lessee—Cancellation of mutual liability—Construction.

By agreement of lease the lessor was to be allowed to make improvements on the leased premises and to deduct the rent from the amount thus expended. While the lease was running, the lessor and lessee mutually agreed to the cancellation of the contract of lease, and reciprocally agreed to release each other from any further liability in respect thereof.

Held, that the effect of such release was to discharge the lessor from any claim for

	PAGE
expenditure on improvements made before the date of cancellation.
Tooch v. Le Roux ...	644
Letting and hiring — Waiver — Restoring premises to former condition.
The plaintiff leased certain premises to the defendant for a term and the defendant undertook to deliver the premises, at the expiration of the term, in like good order and repair. During to the currency of the lease, the Town Council required, as a sanitary measure, in consequence of the plague having broken out, that a cement floor should be substituted for a wooden one, and the defendant, at his own expense and with the knowledge of the plaintiff, made the requisite alterations.
Held, that the defendant was not released, on the expiration of the term, from the obligation of restoring the premises to their former condition.
Verster v. Fletcher ...	916
Liability of partner, see Partnership...	237
Libel, see Pleading	581
Licence (Medical), see Medical Council	483
Licence (cart), see Cape Town Municipality	197
Licensing Court—Withdrawal of application for renewal of licence.
The holder of a licence lodged an application for its renewal with the Magistrate in manner provided by the 42nd section of Act 28 of 1883. An application was made for the sequestration of his estate, and within an hour before the order of sequestration was made he withdrew his application for renewal. A curator bonis was appointed to his

	PAGE
estate, who at the sitting of the Licensing Court on the following day applied for the renewal of the licence. The presiding Magistrate ruled, that as the holder of the licence had withdrawn the application, his curator bonis had no locus standi.
Held, that as the holder had withdrawn his application, with the view of defeating the rights of his creditors, his curator bonis should be allowed to revive the application, and that for that purpose the Licensing Court should be authorized to hold a fresh meeting.
Ex parte Mann in re Moss ...	215
Licensing Court—Right of unsuccessful applicant to be heard.
The applicant having been refused a club licence without having had an opportunity of replying to objections: the Court (on review) ordered the Licensing Board to sit again and hear the application on its merits.
Simcocks v. Wynberg Licensing Court ...	882
Lien—Jus retentionis—Artificer—Removal of goods.
Where an artificer who has manufactured an article from materials belonging to another has voluntarily delivered the article to the owner, he loses his right of retention or lien, and is not entitled to claim an attachment of the article pending an action for his wages, nor is he entitled to an order restraining the removal of the article to another place within the jurisdiction of the Court in the absence of proof that he would be prejudiced in his rights by such removal.
Ex parte Lewin and others ...	675
Lien—Retention—Title deeds.
The applicant agreed with A. to pass a bond in security of

	PAGE		PAGE
his obligations under a lease executed by A. in favour of the applicant and gave a power to the respondent to pass the bond. The power being found to be defective, the respondent requested the applicant to give another power, but the applicant refused and demanded from the respondent the title deeds which he had given to the respondent for the purpose of passing the bond.		he shall not sell liquor to coloured persons without a permit, and another condition that he shall not sell liquor after ten a.m. on the Saturday before Nachtmahl.
Held, that the respondent was not entitled to retain the title deeds.		Held, that these conditions could not be legally imposed.
Sindler v. De Villiers ...	900	Orchard v. Bredasdorp Licensing Court ...	569
Liquidated claim, see Magistrate's jurisdiction ...	244	Liquor licence—Condition—Construction—Lighting of lamp—Closing time.
Liquidated damages, see Penalty	39	A condition was inserted in the appellant's liquor licence that a lamp was to be affixed over the door of the licensed premises and kept lit from sunset to closing time. The hours for which the licence was granted were from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Liquidation—Receivers.		Held, that as the appellant was not legally bound to keep his licensed premises open until 9 p.m., the reasonable construction of the term "closing time" was the time when he actually closed his premises, and that if he actually closed his premises on any night before 9 p.m., he could not be legally convicted for not keeping such lamp lit until 9 p.m. on such night.
Ex parte Sedgwick ...	87	Rex v. Hammerschlag ...	600
Liquor Law—Evidence—"Trap"—Conspiracy.		Liquor licence—Hotel manager—Summons—Acts 44 of 1885, Sec. 11, 39 of 1887, 28 of 1898, Sec. 2.
Rex v. Bathbone ...	487	W., a hotel manager, had been convicted of a contravention of Sec. 2 of Act 28 of 1898, by selling liquor by his barman to a native. The barman had not been appointed by W., but by the hotel proprietor: and the summons did not allege that the native was not a registered voter.
Liquor Laws—Sale by retail—Liability of salesman.		Held on appeal, that as under Sec. 11 of Act 44 of 1855. the manager was responsible for the act of the barman, and as it was not necessary that the
Rex v. Jones ...	650
Liquor licence — Evidence of "Trap" — Irregular procedure.
T. had been convicted of selling liquor after hours on the evidence of a native "trap" and two policemen. There were certain discrepancies in their evidence, which was contradicted by that of disinterested witnesses. The Magistrate refused to compel the trap to answer an important question.
Held, that the proceedings must be quashed.
Rex v. Toooh ...	195
Liquor licence — Conditions — Coloured people — Prohibition.
The Licensing Court of B. imposed a condition on a licence granted to the applicant that summons should allege that the native was not a registered voter, W. had been rightly convicted.

Rex v. Wynne ... 999

Liquor licence—Transfer—Agent.

A bottle licence was granted to S., who transferred it to F., but the Licensing Court refused to ratify the transfer. F. transferred the licence to the appellant, who obtained no ratification of such transfer and did not obtain a bottle licence for himself but continued to sell liquors on his own behalf.

Held, that he was properly convicted of selling liquor without a licence.

Rex v. Cohen ... 994

Liquor licence—Dealing in liquor.

The tenant of a billiard room, not licensed for the sale of intoxicants, who dispenses to a number of persons present intoxicating liquor brought on the premises by one of those persons, is not guilty of dealing in liquor.

Rex v. Taylor ... 304

Liquor Licensing Act, 1883—Renewal of bottle licence—Objections.

It is a valid objection to the renewal of a licence in terms of the 3rd sub-section of section 52 of Act 28 of 1883, that the business is conducted in an improper manner, although it is not alleged that drunkenness was permitted upon the licensed premises.

Cogill v. Queen's Town Licensing Board ... 400

Liquor Licensing Acts—Subscription dance—Refreshments.

The applicants were promoters of a dance, at which they supplied liquor and other refreshments to the subscribers in consideration of the sum of eight shillings and sixpence paid by each subscriber. There was a loss on the transaction, which was paid by the promoters, but if there had been a profit they would have been entitled to the benefit of it.

Held, that as the promoters held no licence, they had been rightly convicted of selling liquor without a licence.

Rex v. Walker and others ... 305

Liquor Licensing Acts—Wholesale licence—Unbroken case.

The appellant, being the holder of a wholesale licence to deal in intoxicating liquors, sold to D. half a dozen quart bottles of Ohlsson's beer for 1s. 6d. and half a dozen Castle ale for 3s. 6d., and, after placing them in a case and nailing down the lid, he delivered the case to the purchaser.

Held, that the sale was by retail and not by wholesale as authorized by sub-section 1 of section 7 of Act 28 of 1883.

Rex v. Reece... 307

Living on earnings of prostitution, see Act 36, 1902 ... 646

Loan—Bailment—Negligence.

The defendant borrowed from the plaintiff a horse, which fell ill on the journey. The defendant's servants left it in the field for several days, after which it died, but there was no evidence whether it would have been saved with due care and diligence.

Held, that the defendant was bound to take at least as much care of the borrowed horse as he would have taken of his own, and that as considerable negligence had been shown in the treatment of the horse, the Magistrate was justified in holding that such negligence was the cause of the death.

Botha v. Botha ... 608

	PAGE
Locutio operis , see Sale and purchase	606
Loss of goods —Liability of bailee.
Behir v. Table Bay Harbour Board	808
Lunatic — Curator — Judicial declaration of lunacy.
The Magistrate's order for detention of an alleged lunatic, although confirmed by a judge, is not such a declaration of lunacy as would justify the Court in appointing a permanent curator of the alleged lunatic's property. For the purpose of such an appointment it is necessary that a summons should be issued and served in the usual way.
Ex parte J. I. de Villiers ...	386
Magistrate's Court — Costs — Defamation.
The plaintiff issued a summons in the Magistrate's Court against the defendant for damages, but omitted the names of the persons in whose presence the alleged defamatory words had been uttered. Before the return day, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant that at the trial he would apply for an amendment of the summons, by inserting the names which he mentioned. The defendant, however, brought no witnesses for the trial, preferring to raise the objection to the form of summons. The Magistrate allowed the plaintiff's application for amendment of the summons, but ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of the day.
Held, that the Magistrate erred in ordering the plaintiff to pay the costs of the day, and the costs were accordingly ordered to be costs in the cause.
Appolis v. Cister	295
Magistrate's Court — Exceptions — Misnomer — Summons.
A summons was issued against the defendant in the names of

	PAGE
R. and M. without any mention of their Christian names. The defendant excepted to the summons in the Magistrate's Court, and upon the exception being overruled, he tendered the amount claimed which he admitted to be owing to the firm of R. and M., carrying on business as tailors.
Held, that the Magistrate ought to have directed an amendment of the summons, which could not possibly prejudice the defendant, but that the exception was of too technical and trivial a nature to justify the Supreme Court, after what had taken place, in practically setting aside the proceedings.
Hobden v. Risely and McIntyre	491
Magistrate's Court — Irregularity.
Where a prisoner had committed a technical assault on M., with which he was charged, and had thereafter committed a serious assault on B., with which he was not charged, but to which most of the evidence was directed and for which the Magistrate admitted he had really sentenced the man. The Court quashed the conviction.
Rex v. Niekerk	476
Magistrate's Court — Judgment for payment in instalments.
The power conferred on Magistrates by the 11th section of Act 20 of 1856 should be exercised with discretion and with due regard to the rights of the creditor.
The plaintiff, to whom the defendant was indebted in a considerable sum for materials sold to him for the building of houses, gave him time for payment, and at the end of that time sued him for the amount. The evidence shewed that the defendant had received a sum of money and sent it to his relatives before the further time was given him, and there was no evidence to show that at the time of the trial the defendant had not sufficient assets to pay the debt in full.

Held, that it was not a reasonable exercise of the Magistrate's discretion to order payment of the debt in instalments extending over a period of several months.

Tunstall and Grant v. Paulse 652

Magistrate's finding on facts—
Circumstantial evidence.

Rex v. Myburgh ... 651

Magistrate's inference from facts,
see Interpleader ... 1001

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Set off
—Liquidated claim.

The plaintiff sued the defendant on a promissory note for £63, and the defendant excepted to the jurisdiction, on the ground that he had a valid claim for an amount exceeding £63, but his claim consisted of a number of uncertain and disputed items which had been referred to arbitration.

Held, that the Magistrate had properly disallowed the exception, on the ground that the claim was too uncertain to be capable of being set off.

The defendant, moreover, filed a counter-claim for £57, consisting of items clearly owing to him, which had not been included in the reference to arbitration.

Held, that although the amount exceeded the Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction, yet as it did not exceed the amount of the plaintiff's claim, the Magistrate had erred in not allowing the counter-claim.

Humphreys v. Humphreys... 244

Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction,
see Act 19 of 1861 ... 316

Mahommedan marriage—Custody of children.

Applicant and respondent had been married according to Mahommedan rites: whether by a duly appointed marriage officer or not did not appear. Thereafter the respondent obtained a divorce from the authorities of his church and retained the custody of the children of the marriage. Applicant now asked for their custody.

Held, that as there was no evidence that the marriage had not been solemnised by a marriage officer, the application must be refused.

Laita v. Hessen ... 74

Malicious arrest.

Reed v. Port Elizabeth Town
Council ... 946

Malicious desertion — Divorce —
Willingness to return.

In an action brought by the wife against the husband for divorce on the ground of malicious desertion, it was proved that after the service of the rule on him, he called on the wife and offered to receive her back, but she refused to see him.

Held, in the absence of proof that the offer was accompanied by words or conduct which would justify the plaintiff in refusing the offer, she was not entitled to a decree of divorce.

Hildebrandt v. Hildebrandt 619

Mandate — Agent — Payment of damages.

The plaintiff, a native, who owned some cattle, left them during his absence from home in charge of his uncle M. During the plaintiff's absence, his brother seduced the defendant's daughter, whereupon M. gave one of the plaintiff's cows to the defendant as com-

PAGE	PAGE
penation for the seduction of his daughter.	Master and servant—Authority—Delict—Damages.
Held in an action by the plaintiff to recover the cow or its value, that under the ordinary law M. had no mandate to give any of the plaintiff's cattle to others for the protection of his brother's honour, and that in the absence of any statement that by native custom in the Native Territory he had such authority, the Magistrate erred in giving judgment for the defendant.	The defendant being sued in a Magistrate's Court for the illegal seizure of the plaintiff's ox, raised the defence that he had committed the act in the performance of his duty as the servant of B.
Tyam v. Kota ... 418	Held, that as the act complained of was in its nature a tort or delict against a third person, the defendant was liable whether or not liability also attached to his master.
Marriage of Natives before 1879, see Native Territories ... 225	Marona v. Blackbeard ... 639
Master and servant—Act 18 of 1873.	Masters and Servants Act—Unlawful detention of child—Right of mother of illegitimate child.
A journeyman mason is not a servant in terms of Act 18 of 1873.	The father of an illegitimate child, four years old, apprenticed it to the appellant without the formal consent of the mother, who objected to the child being apprenticed at that age. The child remained with the mother, and the appellant was informed by the Magistrate of the district, not acting in his judicial capacity, that he was entitled to take possession of the child. He accordingly obtained possession of the child, and the mother claimed the restoration of the child under section 27, chap. 5, of Act 15 of 1856. The proceedings in the Resident Magistrate's Court were in form of a criminal nature, but there was no verdict of guilty and no sentence beyond an order that the child be restored to its mother.
Rex v. Sango... 117	Held, on appeal, that there was not sufficient ground for disturbing the order of the Magistrate's Court.
Master and servant—Breach of contract—Damages.	Rex v. Liebenberg ... 597
Stevenson v. The Liquidators of the Insolvent Estate of W. Stableford & Co. ... 69	Measure of damages, see Encroachment ... 135
Master and servant—Wrongful dismissal—Magistrate's finding on facts.
Gruneberg v. Schiefelbein ... 204
Master and servant—Hire of mules—Act 15 of 1856.
The accused was charged before a J.P. under Act 15 of 1856 with withholding wages for work done by complainant's mules. No section of the Act was specified. Accused was found guilty and fined. Conviction quashed as grossly irregular.
Rex v. Kriek... 504
Master and servant—Wages—Magistrate's jurisdiction.
Mohamet v. Ishmail... 546
Master and servant, see Adulteration of foods ... 297

	PAGE
Medical Council—Act 34 of 1891
—Order for issue of licence—Reciprocity.
On an application for an order that a licence to practice as a dentist be issued by the Colonial Medical Council under the 19th section of the Act, it appeared that one of the regulations framed by the Council under the Act provided that dental diplomas recognised by the British Medical Council shall entitle the holders to registration in this Colony.
Held, that in the absence of proof that the applicant's diploma was so recognised or that he held a diploma otherwise recognised by the Colonial Council, he was not entitled to the order.
Another regulation provided that no diploma of a foreign country shall entitle the holder to registration unless equal rights are given in such country to the holder of any British registrable degree, but in the absence of any express authority given by the Act to frame a regulation of this nature, the Court declined to found its decision on this regulation.
Moore v. Colonial Medical Council 483
Medical practitioner — Fees —
Proof of status.
A medical practitioner, in order to recover fees, must prove that he is duly licensed to practice in this Colony. Production of the Medical register is not sufficient proof of status.
Louw v. Fryer and Nqumbela v. Culligan followed.
Bethune v. Key 296
Messenger of Court—Attachment of private and of partnership property.
Cressay v. Shaw 509

	PAGE
Messenger of Court—Sheriff—
Sale in execution—Damages for wrongful sale.
The defendant C., a messenger of a Magistrate's Court, having the custody of certain sheep, half of which belonged to the plaintiff, sold them in execution of a judgment obtained by defendant K. against the plaintiff's sons. C. did not know that any of the sheep belonged to the plaintiff, but might have ascertained it if he had made reasonable inquiries. The defendant K. took no part in the sale beyond obtaining the warrant of execution in the ordinary course. The plaintiff had no knowledge of the sale until some time after it had taken place.
Held, that K. was not liable for C.'s wrongful act.
Held further, that C. was liable, and that the measure of damages was the value of the plaintiff's sheep at the time when he wrongfully sold them.
Sieberhagen v. Keller and Chantler 322
Mining Ordinances of Rhodesia—
Special registration — Indefeasible title.
It is a good defence to an action for ejectment from mining claims in Rhodesia alleged to have been acquired by the plaintiff before the passing of the Rhodesian Ordinance 1 of 1895, that a certificate of special registration had thereafter been bona fide granted to the defendant in terms of the 70th and 71st sections of that Ordinance after full compliance on his part with the provisions of such Ordinance.
Macaulay v. Jumbo Gold Mining Co. and B.S.A. Co. 171
Minor—Criminal responsibility.
Rex v. Marais 425

	PAGE
Misconduct, see Contract of service	753
Misconduct, see Servant	621
Misjoinder of parties—8th Rule of Court.
The Court refused an application to amend a certain record by substituting the name of L. F. (married out of community to H. J. F.) for H. J. F.; holding that the 8th Rule of Court made it incompetent for the Court to grant the application.
Feltham v. Schlater	939
Misrepresentation, see Estoppel... ..	704
Mistake, see Freight	563
Monument, see Executor... ..	493
Mortgage, see Will	62
Mortgage bond—Penal clause—Estoppel by conduct—Equitable principles.
Rimer v. White	30
Motion, see Ejectment	580
Municipal contractor—Town engineer—Progress of work.
C. and C. had contracted to do certain work for the Municipality of W. The 11th clause of the contract provided that should the contractors, without reasonable or sufficient cause, fail to make such progress with the work as should, in the opinion of the engineers, be proportionate to the total time fixed for the execution of the contract, the engineers should, after having given the contractors 48 hours' notice, in writing, have the power of ejecting them and their employees from the works and taking possession of the works and plans and providing material and labour at the cost of the contractor. When half the time fixed for the completion of the contract had elapsed only one-seventh of the work had

	PAGE
been completed. The defendants thereupon ejected plaintiffs from the works and took possession. Plaintiffs now sued for damages.
Held, that it was not within the discretion of the engineer to decide as to whether there had been reasonable and sufficient cause to retard the work, but that he had discretion to determine whether a proportionate amount of work, having regard to the time limit fixed by the contract, had been completed.
Cochrane and Cherry v. Woodstock Municipality and others	838
Municipal regulations — Governor's approval— Ultra vires.
The Municipality of M. had enacted a certain bye-law, whereby the owner of any goat who should allow it to trespass on any private property should be liable to a certain fine. This bye-law had been approved by the Governor.
Held, that the Municipal Act gives no power to a Municipality to make any bye-law, whereby a private injury done by one individual to another is constituted a criminal offence.
Held further, that the Court has jurisdiction to enquire whether any bye-laws of Municipalities, even though approved by the Governor, are intra vires or not.
De Lange v. Theron	948
Municipal regulations — Sanitation—Engineer.
On an application by the Municipal Council of M. to compel the respondent to remove certain earth closets to another part of a building which was being constructed, on the ground that they interfered with the width of a passage on the respondent's land, which, under the Municipal regulations, ought to be of a certain width, it appeared that the Municipal Engineer, entrusted by the Council with the duty of seeing to the carrying out of the regulations, had pointed out the spot as proper for building the closets, and had visited the place while the erection was proceeding.

	PAGE	PAGE
Held, that the applicants were not entitled to succeed.
Mowbray Municipality v. Muller	401
Municipal regulations—Kafir beer—Act 28 of 1896.
The defendant, municipal inspector, purporting to act under the regulations of the Municipality of A., entered the hut of the plaintiff, a native woman, by force, on the ground that he suspected Kafir beer to be concealed in the hut, but no beer was found. The regulation authorized any person thereto authorized by the Council to enter any hut upon reasonable suspicion of an infringement of any regulation, but there was no regulation relating to Kafir beer. The 8th section of Act 28 of 1898 enacts that any owner of land, upon being satisfied that there is reason to suspect the existence of Kafir beer within any hut, may give written authority to any other person to search such hut, but the defendant had no such written authority from any one.
Held, that the entrance was illegal, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the trespass.
Ngili v. McLeod	241
Mutual will, see Bequest... ..	157
Mutual will—Executors of the same estate appointed under two wills.
A. and B., married in community, made a joint will, by which they appointed each other as heirs "of our estate until our death, and as executor we appoint the survivor of us and as executors of our joint estate after our death we appoint our sons," the applicants. B., the wife, died, upon which A. admitted and remained in possession of the joint estate. He married a second wife and made a second will, jointly, with her, by which they revoked all previous wills except the one just mentioned, and they appointed the respondent as executor. A. died, and the Master issued letters of administration in favour of the respondent, and the applicants as executors of A.'s estate. There was no application to set aside this appointment, but the applicants asked for an order, declaring that the respondent was not entitled to interfere with the assets of A. acquired before the death of his first wife.
Held, that in the absence of any proof that the respondent did not intend to abide loyally by both wills, the order should not be made.
Estate Kroese v. Kroese and others	392
Native area—Act 28 of 1883, sections 21 and 22—Acceptance of licence subject to condition—Aboriginal native.
Where the Governor has by Proclamation defined any area as one, within the limits of which it shall not be competent for any Licensing Court to authorize licences in terms of the 21st section of Act 28 of 1883, it lies upon any one who denies the validity of the Proclamation to prove that the area is not one to which the section is applicable.
The acceptance of a licence purporting to be subject to such a Proclamation issued by the Governor is an admission by the licence-holder that the area within which his licence holds good is one to which the Act is applicable.

PAGE

Rex v. Keese... .. 724

Native Territories Penal Code—
Fraud—False pretences.

The appellant was charged with a contravention of the 196th section of the Native Territories Penal Code, 1886, and the fraud relied upon was the giving of cheques on a Bank in which he had not sufficient funds. It appeared, however, that he had made arrangements before giving the cheques for the sale of some property, which afterwards fell through, but which at the time he believed would enable him to supply the necessary funds to the Bank in time to meet the cheques when presented.

Held on appeal against the conviction, that there was not sufficient proof of fraud to justify a conviction under the 196th section, which applies to fraud, not amounting to a false pretence.

Rex v. Hayes... .. 989

Native Succession Act, 1864—
Community of property—
Setting aside appointment of executor.

A native, to whose property Act 18 of 1864 would apply, having died, the respondent was appointed as executor, and two years after his appointment the applicant, a son of the deceased, applied to have the appointment and all proceedings thereunder set aside, alleging as a cause of prejudice that one-half of the estate had been awarded to the widow of the deceased, whom he had married according to Christian rites.

Held, that in the absence of an antenuptial contract, the deceased must be presumed to have been married in community, and that, although letters of administration were not necessary on his death, yet as the appointment had been made and the estate fully administered without any prejudice to the applicant, there was no good ground for setting the proceedings aside.

PAGE

Estate Tantsi v. Executors
Estate Nchela 943

Natives—Private location - Lease
—Act 30 of 1899.

The accused had housed a considerable number of natives on his property. He was not their employer and had not taken out a licence under Act 30 of 1899 for a private location. Several groups of these natives hired, on lease, certain specified rooms, at a monthly rental of £11 5s., for each group. The Magistrate held that these leases were not bona fide, and convicted the accused.

Held on appeal, that as the accused (now appellant) had kept within the letter of the law, the conviction must be quashed.

Rex v. Jaffa 193

Native law—Custody of illegitimate child.

The plaintiff, a native woman in the Transkeian Territory, had an illegitimate child by the defendant, who was also a native, and she afterwards married another native. Her father gave the custody of the child to the defendant, who paid for its education.

Held on appeal from the Chief Magistrate, that as the case was between natives, native law was applicable, and that the Court below had properly dismissed an action by the plaintiff, claiming the custody of the child.

Bewbew v. Dennis 238

Native reserve, see Divisional
Council 905

	PAGE		PAGE
Native territories—Suits between natives—Succession to intestate estates—Marriage between natives before 1879—Eldest son—Executor dative.		cow died. There was no expert evidence as to the cause of the cow's death.
The applicant was the eldest son of a native who married a native woman before 1879 in Tembulund. The father died intestate in 1903, the respondent was appointed executor dative, and he proposed to distribute the estate according to the Colonial law of intestate succession.		Held, on appeal, that the Magistrate had properly given judgment for the defendant.
Held, that the estate should be administered and distributed according to native law and custom, under which the eldest son was entitled to obtain possession of the whole estate, subject to certain onerous obligations in favour of the widow and other children of the deceased.		Makek v. Set... .. 275
Held further, that an executor under Colonial law was not the proper person to administer and distribute the estate, and the appointment of the respondent as executor dative was accordingly set aside.		Negligence—Damages—Pleading.
Sekelini v. Sekelini 225		Petersen v. Griffith 718
Negligence, see Bailment... .. 980		Negligence—Neighbouring proprietor—Injury to property.
„ see Architect... .. 268		Friedmond v. Solomon ... 629
Negligence—Damage to property.		Negligence, see Party wall ... 185
Kaiser v. Shenker & Co. ... 477		Negotiable instruments—Share certificates indorsed in blank—Agency—Estoppel.
Negligence, see Divisional Council	355	The plaintiff having purchased 100 shares in a Transvaal gold mining company, and accepted as sufficient delivery a certificate indorsed in blank by the registered holder, deposited the certificate with his broker for safe custody. The broker delivered the certificate for valuable consideration to the defendant who had no notice of the plaintiff's interest in the shares, and he having purchased them under stock exchange rules, had them registered in his name. In an action for a return of the shares,
„ see Harbour Board ... 331		Held, that as the further act of having the shares registered in the transferee's name was necessary to perfect his right the certificate indorsed in blank by the registered owner was not a negotiable instrument.
„ see Personal injury ... 458		Held further, that although the instrument was not negotiable, the universal custom in South Africa being to accept certificates so indorsed as being “in order,” the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct in leaving the instrument in that form in the hands of a share broker from asserting his right to the shares.
Negligence—Risk—Export.		Van Blommestein v. Holliday	64
While the plaintiff's cow was calving, M. attempted to remove the afterbirth, but failed. The defendant, who did not profess to be a veterinary surgeon, offered to try the removal, and the plaintiff consented and held the cow's head while the defendant operated. The operation proved unsuccessful, and the

	PAGE
Net price, see Agency ...	260
Non-joinder, see Purchase and sale	861
Notice of hearing, see Irregularity	507
Notice of revocation of agent's authority, see Principal and agent ...	370

Notices in English and Dutch papers.

Where the Court orders a notice to be published in an English and a Dutch newspaper, it must in each case be published in the respective languages of those papers.

Ex parte The Consistory of the Dordrecht Dutch Reformed Church ... 815

Novation—Promissory note.

Provisional sentence refused where plaintiff still held a promissory note which defendant had given in lieu of that sued upon.

Pedersen v. Kennedy ... 85

Novation, see Promoter ... 851

Noxal action, see Pauperies ... 720

Nudum pactum, see Consideration 408

Objections to renewal, see Liquor licence... 400

Occupation, see Will ... 883

Onus of proof—Magistrate's jurisdiction as to amount.

Van Wyk v. Terblans ...1003

Option of purchase — Sale by auction—Interdict.

The respondent held an option to purchase a farm belonging to the applicant at a certain price. Without exercising such option, the respondent advertised the farm for sale by public auction.

Held, that the respondent should be interdicted from proceeding with such sale unless and until he should exercise his option.

King Bros. v. Rowan ... 239

	PAGE
Option, see Consideration ...	823

Ordinance 72 of 1830, Sec. 12, see Evidence ... 505

Ordinance 6 of 1843, see Culpable insolvency ... 21

Ordinance 6 of 1843, Sec. 86 and 88, see Insolvency ... 744

Ordinance 6 of 1843, Sec. 84 and 88, see Undue preference ... 742

Ordinance 15 of 1845, see Will ... 617

Ordinance 15 of 1845, see Will ... 132

Owner or occupier of land—Dog—Trespass—Minor—Act 40 of 1889.

The defendant, a minor, was sued in a Magistrate's Court for damages for shooting the plaintiff's dog while trespassing at night on land occupied by him, and he raised the defence of minority. It appeared, however, that the power to defend had been signed by the defendant, purporting to be assisted by his father and natural guardian, who, as such, also signed the power.

Held, that the power cured any defect in the summons.

Held further, that under the 226th section of Act 40 of 1889, the defendant was entitled to shoot the dog trespassing on property in his lawful occupation and not being under the charge of any person.

Willmer v. Rance ... 605

Pactum de non petendo—Forgery.

Where to an application for provisional sentence, the defendant pleaded plaintiff's written agreement to accept payment of a debt by annual instalments, which agreement the plaintiff alleged to be a forgery, the Court, judging from the admissions of the plaintiff that his contention was improbable, refused provisional sentence

	PAGE
and directed plaintiff to prosecute defendant for forgery and then go into the principal case.
Choritz v. Shoolman ...	317
Particulars of complaint by female, see Criminal Law ...	374
Partnership—Insolvency.
The applicant and S. bought certain property for the purpose of making profit out of cottages which they built thereon. Being unable to pay the creditors who had supplied goods to the partnership, S. informed the applicant that he would have to surrender the estate of the partnership. The applicant did not pay any of the debts, and S. surrendered the estate by petition, signed by himself on behalf of the partnership. After a trustee had been appointed, the applicant applied to set aside the sequestration.
Held, that as the estate was insolvent and no benefit would accrue to anyone from an order setting aside the proceedings, the application should be refused.
Ross v. Hazell and Schwab...	457
Partnership, see Quantity surveyor	393
Partnership—Racehorse—Costs.
Warner v. Schultz ...	574
Partnership — Condition — Account.
The plaintiff signed two promissory notes in favour of L., the consideration alleged being that the plaintiff should become a partner with L. in the purchase and sale of certain Government blankets. The notes were discounted and afterwards paid by L., who handed the notes back to the plaintiff and treated the arrangement as to a partnership as being at an end and sold all his interest in the matter to the defendants. The

	PAGE
price of the blankets was paid by the defendants, who employed the plaintiff to supervise the packing and export of the blankets at a salary, which was duly paid. All the expenses of the enterprise were paid by the defendants. There was further evidence that the partnership with L. was to be conditional on the plaintiff's contributing his share of the capital and that the defendants, when they bought the interest of L., were not aware of his previous arrangement with the plaintiff.
Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim an account of profits from the defendants.
Lobascher v. Cohen and Carn	249
Partnership, see Copyright ...	97
Partnership—Death of partner—Directions to surviving partner to carry on business for benefit of a third party.
Ex parte Naggs ...	20
Partnership—Principal and agent—Plea in abatement—Liability of partner for goods supplied to firm.
In an action against two members of a firm, the defendant, one of the members, took the objection that he was not liable, as the plaintiff had in the first instance debited the other member alone in their books. It appeared from the evidence that the goods had been ordered on behalf of the firm, that they had been delivered to the firm for the purpose of a contract entered into by the firm, that the firm had received the amount of the contract and that the defendant had himself written to the plaintiff on behalf of the firm, promising to pay the amount claimed.
Held, that the fact of the plaintiff's having in the first instance debited the defendant's partner alone did not prevent them from rectifying the mistake and afterwards suing the defendant also.

Guardian Insurance Company v. Lovemore's Executors distinguished.

Murray v. Findlay & Co. ... 237

Partnership—Dissolution—Profits.

The plaintiff and defendant being partners, agreed upon a dissolution, to take effect only on payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of two post-dated cheques given to the plaintiff as his share of the partnership assets. The defendant remained in possession of the partnership assets, part of which he sold at a considerable profit, but he failed to pay the amount of the cheques which were dishonoured at their due date.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover not only the amount of the cheques but the amount of profits actually made by the defendant, pending the actual dissolution of the partnership, after deduction of such portion of the amount of the cheques as had been devoted to the purchase of the goods on which the profit was made.

Aronstain v. Maisel ... 601

Party wall—"Common wall"—Servitude—Destruction or rebuilding of common wall—Agreement—Interdict.

The rights to a common wall partake of the nature of a servitude, but the wall itself is also regarded in many important respects as common property.

The neighbouring proprietors are not co-owners, in the proper sense of the term, of the wall, because the land on which the wall stands is not their common property, but they have the rights of co-owners to this extent that each is entitled to the maintenance of the wall on his neighbour's property as well as of the part standing on his own property.

The applicant and respondent, being co-owners of a certain building, agreed to subdivide the same and to erect a party wall on and along the boundary line, such party wall to take the place of a partition wall then existing and separating the portions allotted to each. It was also agreed that the party wall should be constructed in manner directed by arbitrators. Their award was given, but the party wall was not constructed. A fire occurred, in consequence of which the partition wall had to be demolished.

Held, that one of the parties to the agreement was not entitled to an interdict restraining the other from building a party wall in the manner directed by the award.

Wiener v. Van der Byl ... 180

Party wall—Subsidence of building—Negligence—Damages.

Wiley & Co. v. Isaacs & Co. 185

Patent defect, see Sale and purchase ... 105

Patent defect, see Guarantee ... 975

Pauperies—Noxal action—Horse—Damages—Abrogation of law by disuse—Culpa.

The plaintiff's horse, while standing in harness before a farrier's door, was kicked by the defendant's horse which had been brought there to be shod, and was being led by the servant of O., to whom the defendant had lent the horse. There was no proof of negligence on the part of the servant, nor was there any evidence that the defendant's horse had previously been known to kick or injure any person or other horse.

Held, that although under the Roman and Dutch Laws the

	PAGE
defendant would, as owner, have been liable for damages, unless he tendered to surrender his horse as compensation, he cannot, under the law of the Colony, be held liable in the absence of any culpa.
The case of Seavill v. Colley (9 Juta 39) followed.
Parker v. Reed	720
Payment by cheque, see Agent ...	701
Payment of debts, see Executor...	438
Payment to agent, see Principal and agent	288, 472
Payment to agent, see Promissory note	357
Payment by husband to enable wife to bring action for surgical expenses—Alimony.
Maxey v. Maxey	819
Pension, see Insolvent	902
Perjury—Proof.
In the course of three separate trials respecting the ownership of certain cattle, M. had made contradictory statements on oath. His statements at the first and third trials agreed, but were contradicted by his statement at the second trial. He was thereupon tried and convicted in the R.M. Court for perjury committed at the second trial. No evidence was led to show that the statement he then made was false.
Held on appeal, that the perjury had not been proved and the conviction must be quashed.
Rex v. Mangoba	507
Personal injury — Negligence — Damages.
Anderson v. Caledon Baths, Ltd.... ..	458
Personal injury — Negligence — Responsibility of building contractor.
Stracey v. Adams	898

	PAGE
Personal injury—Negligence.
Alexander v. Muir	576
Personal injury — Negligence — Orders of superior officers.
Mulvey v. Cape Government Railways	894
Personation, see Election petition	949
Penalty Forfeiture—Liquidated damages — Statutory confirmation of contract.
The plaintiff, under an agreement with the defendant, obtained a concession to construct a line of railway within a prescribed period, and the defendant undertook to pay a subsidy for such construction, but stipulated by clause 17 that in case of non-completion within such prescribed period certain large sums of money lodged with or retained by him as security should be forfeited as and for liquidated damages, and that thereupon such agreement should cease and determine, and it should be lawful for the defendant to take possession of the incomplete line and pay to the plaintiff the actual cost, less the moneys so lodged or retained. By the following clause the parties agreed that the ordinary rules of law regarding the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract should not apply to certain specified breaches by the plaintiff after completion of the line.
Held, that the ordinary rules relating to the recovery of penalties for breaches of contract should be applied in case of a breach by the plaintiff of any obligations entered into by him under the 17th clause. The 9th clause of Act 19 of 1900 enacted that the agreement, which was set forth in a schedule to the Act, "is hereby confirmed, and shall have the same force and effect as if it

	PAGE
were set forth fully in the body hereof."
Held, that this enactment would not justify the Court in applying different rules of construction to the 17th clause from those which would have been applied if the agreement had not been so confirmed.
Held further, that as the large amounts stipulated to be forfeited, exceeding £110,000, are manifestly out of all proportion to the damages suffered or inconvenience undergone by the defendant by reason of the non-completion of the subsidy line, the penalty of forfeiture should not be enforced notwithstanding that the sums are made payable "as and for liquidated damages."
Hills v. Colonial Government	39
Peritia Artis, see Architect	... 747
Petition—Transfer—Act 19 of 1891.
A firm was owned by several proprietors in undivided shares, and a partition was effected by which the applicant and two other proprietors obtained a share, divided from the shares of the remaining proprietors, but the share thus obtained by the applicant and two proprietors remained undivided as between them.
Held, that the 12th section of Act 19 of 1891 was not applicable to the applicant's undivided portion.
Nieuwoudt v. Registrar of Deeds	... 231
Petition of creditors, see Sequestration, compulsory	... 83, 148
Plans, see Engineer	... 201
Plays, see Copyright	... 97
Plea—General denial—Exception.
The defendant by his plea referred to each paragraph of

	PAGE
the declaration and denied the allegations therein contained.
Held, there was no ground for exception taken to the plea, but the costs of the exception were allowed to stand over until it should appear at the trial whether or not every allegation was intended to be denied.
Price & Co. v. Webner	... 631
Plea in abatement, see Promoters of company	... 995
Pleading—Libel.
If it intended to plead justification in an action for libel, that defence must be pleaded specifically.
Wright and another v. the Cape Times, Ltd.	... 581
Pleading see Negligence	... 718
Police Offences Act, section 14—Proof of authority—Police officer.
In a prosecution for a contravention of the 14th section of Act 27 of 1882, the demand for admittance was made by a policeman, but there was no proof that he had been thereto authorized by any officer of police or chief constable.
Held, that in the absence of such proof, the defendant had been wrongfully convicted of such contravention.
Rex v. Lang	... 301
Power to sue, see Company	... 492
Power of attorney to sue—Signature by trustee for self and co-trustees.
Where an action is brought by two or more trustees of an insolvent estate, the power of attorney to sue must be signed by or on behalf of all the trustees, but where one of the trustees produces a power signed by his co-trustee or co-trustees to sign the power to sue on his or their behalf, it is not a sufficient objection to

	PAGE
such power to sue that it is signed by on'y one trustee "for self and co-trustees."
The cases of Trustees of Dodds v. Watson (1 Menz. 140) and Walker v. Beetons Trustees (Buch. for 1868, p. 225, and for 1869, p. 38) distinguished.
Muller Bros. v. Lombard ...	973
Practice—Ejectment—Motion.
Where the plaintiff had issued summons for ejectment.
Held, that ejectment could not under the circumstances be granted on motion.
Roos v. Chetty ...	714
Pre-emption, right of, see Consideration ...	408
Preference, see Debentures ...	551
Prescription, see Registration ...	614
Presentment, see Promissory note	691
Previous conviction—Lashes.
B. was convicted of having broken into a store on April 2nd. He was, being a minor, ordered to complete the term of his apprenticeship till his majority. He was subsequently convicted of a theft committed on February 1st, and sentenced to lashes. The latter sentence was quashed.
Rex v. Bezuidenhout ...	496
Principal and agent—Payment to dishonest agent.
Defendant had made a payment by cheque to one S., who had sold certain sheep to him as plaintiff's agent. S. there-upon forged plaintiff's indorsement on the cheque and converted it to his own uses.
Held, that as S. was known to the plaintiff to be a man of doubtful character, and the defendant had acted bona fide, this payment to plaintiff was good.
Abel v. Elliott & Co. ...	288

	PAGE
Principal and agent—Promissory note—Payment to agent.
J. had engaged one S. to raise a loan. S. approached H., who advanced the money on J.'s promissory note, "payable to H. or order at S.'s office." J. paid the money to S., who, before paying it over to H., became insolvent. H. now sued J. on the promissory note.
Held, that H. was not entitled to recover.
Heydenrych v. Jeffery ...	472
Principal and agent—Tacit agency
Notice of revocation of authority.
The defendant Club had for several years been in the habit of buying their market supplies on credit from the plaintiff Company, through the Club steward, until the appointment of G. as steward. G. continued for two months to buy market supplies on credit from the plaintiff Company, and the Club continued to pay for them. The Club then entered into an agreement with G., by which he was appointed manager, charged with the duty of catering for the Club, but without authority to pledge the credit of the Club. No public notice of this agreement was given nor was private notice given to the plaintiff Company, which continued for seven months, to supply goods on credit to G., in the belief that they were selling to the Club.
Held, that in the absence of any knowledge on the plaintiff Company's part of the change in G.'s position, they were entitled to recover from the Club the price of the goods thus supplied.
Bulawayo Market Co. v. Bulawayo Club ...	370
Principal and agent—Onus of proving agency.
Levenson v. Vurick ...	858

	PAGE
Principal and agent—Payment to authorized agent.
Heydenrych v. Dunman ...	909
Principal and agent, see Verbal lease ...	879
Principal and surety—Construction of contract—Interest.
The defendants, as sureties and co-principal debtors, undertook to pay to the plaintiff Bank on demand all sums of money which the principal debtor should from time to time owe to the Bank, "provided, nevertheless, that the total amount to be recoverable from them shall not exceed in the whole the sum of £3,900, together with such further sum for interest, charges and costs as shall from time to time have accrued or become due and payable thereon." Held, that the defendants were liable for interest on the debtor's overdraft of £3,900 for the whole period covered by the guarantee and not merely from the date of demand for payment made on them.
National Bank v. Graaff ...	680
Procedure, see Commission ...	671
Promissory note—Note payable at a particular place—Maker—Holder—Presentment for payment—Agency.
On the due date of a promissory note for £105, made by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, and payable at the office of one S., the plaintiff presented the note for payment at the office of S., where a letter, written by the defendant, asking for a fortnight's extension, was handed to the plaintiff. The plaintiff accordingly allowed the extension of time, after the expiration of which he repeatedly requested S. to pay, but was put off with the excuse that he had not yet

	PAGE
succeeded in raising a permanent loan for the defendant. In fact, S. had raised the loan, and out of the proceeds had, at the end of the fortnight's interval, received payment of the note, which, however, he had not in his possession and could not hand over to the defendant. S. having absconded, the plaintiff sued the defendant, who set up the defence that S. was the agent of the plaintiff to receive payment of the note. Held, on failure of proof of such agency, that the defendant, as maker, remained liable on the note of which the plaintiff was still the legal holder.
Heydenrych v. Jeffery ...	691
Promissory note—Principal and agent—Agent's authority to receive payment.
Heydenrych v. Hoctor ...	357
Promoter of company—Novation.
The defendant, who at the time was promoting a limited liability Company, bought certain goods from the plaintiff for the use of the intended Company, but he bought the goods in his own name, and the plaintiff debited the defendant in his books with the price. The Company was afterwards formed, and the plaintiff on one occasion sent an account for payment to the Company, but on another occasion the defendant gave him his own cheque in part payment. Held, that the mere sending of the account by the plaintiff to the Company did not constitute a novation or release the defendant from his liability.
Price & Co. v. Webner ...	851
Promoters of company—Partners—Joint and several liability—Nonjoinder—Plea in abatement.
The defendant and S. and K. employed the plaintiffs, who

	PAGE
were attorneys, to do the professional work in connection with the promotion and registration of a company, and afterwards S. and K. each paid one-third of the professional charges, but the defendant refused to pay his share.
Held, that the promoters of a company are not necessarily partners, and that the defendant could not lawfully object to the nonjoinder of S. and K. as defendants in an action brought against himself by the plaintiffs for one-third of their claim.
Walker and Jacobsohn v. Norden	995
Proof of authority of police officer, see Police Offences Act	301
Proof of status, see Medical practitioner	296
Provisional sale, see Sale and purchase	328
Provisional sentence—Damages.
Damages cannot be set up as a defence against a claim for provisional sentence.
Hales, Caird & Co. v. Boesen	485
Provisional sentence — Incorrect plan.
The Court refused provisional sentence for the purchase price of certain property where defendant alleged that the plan exhibited at the sale was incorrect.
Buykes v. Truike Bros. ...	377
Provisional sentence—Promissory note—Proof of allegations in affidavit.
The Court granted postponement of a provisional case, in order to enable the defendant to produce proof of certain allegations contained in her affidavit, which, if proved, would be a good defence to plaintiff's claim.
Heydenrych v. Frame ...	377

	PAGE
Provisional sentence—Surety.
The Court refused provisional sentence against a surety, the principal debtor not having been excused; although the principal debtor was absent from the country, and it was alleged, but not proved, that he was insolvent.
Verster and another v. Pienaar	318
Provisional sentence—Conflict of evidence.
The plaintiff sued defendant on an acknowledgment of debt signed by her as surety and co-principal debtor on behalf of her husband (an insolvent). The husband alleged that this debt had been paid, and in this he was supported by the affidavit of another deponent, but no receipt was produced.
Held, that provisional sentence must be refused and the parties directed to go into the principal case
Heydenrych v. Frame ...	632
Provisional sentence — Legal holder of bill—Knowledge of equities.
On a claim for provisional sentence by the holder of a bill of exchange against the acceptor, the defence was raised that the goods for the price, of which the bill had been accepted, did not correspond to the goods actually bought, but the plaintiff denied any knowledge of any defence which the acceptor might have against the drawer.
Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to provisional sentence.
Northampton Bank v. Ward & Co.	566
Provisional sentence—Renunciation of benefits by woman.
Where the Court was not satisfied that the legal effects of renunciation of benefits had been duly explained to a woman who had signed a

	PAGE
promissory note as a co-principal debtor, provisional sentence was refused.
Smalberger v. Keller	... 772
Purchase and sale—Transfer—Tender—Divisible obligation—Non-joinder of parties—Exceptions.
The plaintiff and one R. bought from the defendant four farms for £11,500, the price being payable in two instalments and by bond to be passed by the purchasers for the balance. After paying half an instalment, R. became insolvent, and the plaintiff, after paying half an instalment, tendered to pay half of the second instalment and to pass a bond for half the balance, and he claimed transfer of one-half undivided share of the farms.
Held, on exceptions to the plaintiff's declaration, that the obligation to pass transfer is indivisible, and that the plaintiff's tender of half the purchase price does not entitle him to claim transfer of half the farm.
Delpont v. Nesper	... 861
Purchase "on call," see Share broker...	... 271
Qualifications, see Law agent	... 781
Quantum minoris, see Guarantee	... 975
Quantum minoris, see Sale and purchase	... 609
Quantity surveyor, see Architect	747
Quantity surveyor—Partnership—Division of profits.
Holland v. Sherwood	... 393
Railway, see Freight	... 563
Railway bye-laws, see Act 19 of 1861	... 261
Rebel—Belligerent rights—Commandeering.
Estate Williams v. Nel	... 998

	PAGE
Rebellion, see Treason	... 118
Receipt—Payment of money—Cheque—Stamp.
The appellant wrote to V. and B., who owed him money, asking them to send a cheque for the amount. They sent their cheque, whereupon the appellant gave them a receipt, as follows: "Received cheque." V. and B. had funds in the bank which was solvent, and honoured the cheque when presented.
Held, that the receipt was equivalent to a receipt for the payment of money and required a penny stamp.
Rex v. Standen	... 397
Receivers, see Liquidation	... 87
Rectification of register, see Trade mark	... 404
Registration, see Ante-nuptial contract	... 381
Registration of title—Prescription.
The applicant bought one-eighth of a farm and entered into occupation. He afterwards sold one-sixteenth and remained in occupation of that portion. The total period of his occupation exceeded 30 years. After the applicant had sold one-sixteenth, it was discovered that the person from whom he had bought was the registered owner of one-sixteenth only. The applicant obtained a rule, calling on persons claiming the one-sixteenth, to show cause why the applicant should not by reason of his occupation for over 30 years be registered as the owner of the one-sixteenth. The owner of the one-sixteenth in question was dead, and his heirs did not oppose the application. A person claiming to have derived a title from such owner opposed, but as he shewed no better title than the

	PAGE
applicant, the rule was made absolute.
Ex parte Malherbe ...	614
Release from civil imprisonment.
The Court granted an order for the release of a debtor from civil imprisonment on its appearing that he had no means of paying his debt.
Taboriski v. Hoffenberg ...	396
Remit to Magistrate—Act 20 of 1856.
Where a charge of house-breaking had been remitted to a Magistrate for trial under Act 20 of 1856, and the Magistrate had imposed a sentence of nine months' imprisonment; the sentence was, on review, reduced to three months.
Rex v. Plaatjes ...	312
Removal of bar.
Laidlaw, Mackill & Co. v. Baker, Baker & Co. ...	1019
Removal of building, see Encroachment ...	135
Removal of trial from Circuit Court to Criminal Sessions of Supreme Court — Postponement of trial.
Ex parte Vyner ...	228
Removal of trial, see Jury ...	783
Rent, see Interdict ...	504
Rent—Breach of condition by lessor—Cancellation of lease—Damages.
In an action for rent the defendant filed a counter claim for damages alleged to have been sustained by him by reason of the plaintiff having let adjoining premises to a fruiterer in breach of a condition of the lease. The counter claim, however, was withdrawn, but the Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff having broken

	PAGE
a condition of the lease, was not entitled to rent.
Held, that as the defendant remained in occupation, and did not claim a cancellation of the lease and had withdrawn the counter claim for damages, the Magistrate ought to have given judgment for the amount of the rent.
Levy and another v. Coliwas ...	236
Rent, see Interpleader ...	240
Repudiation of contract.
The plaintiff entered into a contract for the purchase of 100 bottles of milk a day from the defendant. The milk was to be fetched by the plaintiff, but on the day on which the first delivery was to be made, the plaintiff did not appear, nor on the second day. From this and other circumstances the defendant came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had repudiated his contract. The plaintiff having subsequently found a purchaser of the milk at a profit, claimed it from the defendant. The Magistrate having found from the whole of the evidence that the plaintiff repudiated the contract; the Court, on appeal, refused to disturb the finding.
Green v. Le Roes ...	38
Rcs religiosa—Burial ground.
The Court refused to grant leave on motion to remove the bodies from a certain burial ground and to sell the same.
Ex parte Van Niekerk ...	482
Resident Magistrate's jurisdiction — Trespass—Right to occupy land.
Yolo v. Majiyezi ...	308
Resident Magistrate's Court—Jurisdiction — Damages — Trespass — Right of way — Bona fide defence.
To a summons for trespass in a Magistrate's Court, the de-

PAGE	PAGE
fendant excepted on the ground of want of jurisdiction, inasmuch as he claimed a right of way over the plaintiff's land. The Magistrate thereupon took the evidence of the defendant's witnesses, and finding that there was no prima facie case in support of the existence of such a right of way, he overruled the exception.	Retail sale, see Liquor laws ... 650
Held on appeal, that, as in the absence of such a prima facie case, the defence could not be held to be a bona fide one and that consequently the jurisdiction was not ousted.	Return of goods, see Sale and purchase ... 754
Haak v. Basson ... 946	Review—Admission and rejection of illegal evidence.
Resident Magistrate's Court—Civil action—Noting appeal—Leave to appeal.	The defendant was charged in a Magistrate's Court with the offence of obstructing a public road, and the only evidence given by the prosecution was the record of a conviction against another person of having obstructed the same road. The defendant tendered evidence to prove that the road was not a public road, but the evidence was rejected, on the ground that after the previous conviction the road must be held to be a public road.
The defendant, in a Magistrate's Court, against whom judgment was given in an action for rent, noted an appeal with the Clerk three days after the next Court day, under a mistaken impression as to the days on which the Court usually sat.	Held on review, that the evidence tendered ought to have been admitted, as it was material to the issue, the proceedings were set aside.
Held, that it was competent for the Supreme Court to give leave to appeal notwithstanding the omission to note an appeal on the next Court day after judgment, and as important interests were involved and the appeal was not shown to be frivolous, the Court granted leave to appeal.	Rex v. De Stadler ... 398
Afrika v. Rhenish Mission Society ... 945	Review—Appeal—Irregularity of proceedings.
Restitutio in integrum, see Executor 591	On a summons for a review of proceedings in an inferior Court, it is not competent for the applicant to raise the question, whether upon a fair survey of the evidence the decision ought not to have been in his favour, but the applicant should confine himself to the grounds of review authorized by the law.
Restitution of conjugal rights.	Rex v. Ball ... 488
The Court granted a decree for restitution of conjugal rights even though the applicant appeared somewhat unwilling to rejoin her husband. The husband was directed to furnish the applicant with means wherewith to defray costs of her journey.	Review, see Valuation Court ... 220
Stevens v. Stevens ... 131	Right to land, see Alien ... 247
	"Right of way"—Cancellation of sale—"Right of way" is equivalent to "via."
	Where G. sold land to P. on the following condition of sale: "Purchaser to have a right of way over the remaining extent,"
	Held, that on offer by G. to P. of a passage 3 feet wide did

	PAGE
not comply with the above condition.
Semble, that 8 feet was the least width that P. could be compelled to take.
Pietersen v. Estate of Gabrielse	320
"Right of way," see R.M. Court	946
Right to occupy land, see R.M.'s jurisdiction	308
Rule of Court, No. 8, see Misjoinder of parties	939
Sale and purchase—Breach of contract.
Cook v. Schreiber	446
Sale and purchase—Provisional sale — Agency — Scope of agent's authority.
W. had instructed one C. to buy certain property for him at a public auction for £7,000. A portion of the property was put up provisionally and knocked down to C. for £4,500. W. at once repudiated C.'s agency. W. being sued to complete his purchase and take transfer.
Held, that as C. had not acted within the scope of his authority, and moreover as a provisional sale binds neither purchaser nor vendor, W. was justified in repudiating C. as his agent, and that absolution must be granted from the instance.
Cohen v. White	328
Sale and purchase—Theft.
Rex v. Louw	432
Sale and purchase—Verbal contract.
Langford v. Miles, Boyd & Co.	502
Sale and purchase—Conditional purchase.
Cunningham and Cortese v. Rutherford	144

	PAGE
Sale and purchase—Patent defect.
Van Holdt v. Blake	105
Sale and purchase—Principal and agent — Promissory note — Consideration.
Wrensch v. Crafford	115
Sale and purchase, see Fixtures ...	205
Sale and purchase—Locatio operis — Price—Tailor.
The plaintiff, a tailor, having delivered a suit of clothes ordered by the defendant, the latter refused to take it, on the ground that the coat did not fit, and refused to give the plaintiff the opportunity to alter it, so as to make it fit. It was proved that the coat might have been so altered if the defendant had allowed the plaintiff to fit it in the ordinary manner.
Held, that the plaintiff, who tendered the suit, was entitled to recover the price agreed upon.
Theunissen v. Burns	606
Sale and purchase—Suitability of goods supplied for a specific purpose.
Toucher v. Oosthuizen	875
Sale and purchase—Warranty of quality— Quanti minoris.
The defendant having bought a quantity of eggs from the plaintiff, asked him not to deliver them at once. The plaintiff kept the eggs, ready packed, for about fourteen days, and then sent them to the defendant, who found that some of them had gone bad and had them publicly sold at the plaintiff's risk.
Held, in an action by the plaintiff for the price, that although the plaintiff must be held to have warranted the eggs to be fit for the purpose for which they had been intended, this warranty did not extend

PAGE	PAGE
beyond the time when the defendant ought to have accepted delivery, and that the defendant was not entitled to deduct from the purchase price the difference between such price and the amount realised at the public sale.	Sale and purchase—Return of goods.
Moritz v. Murray ... 609	Oosthuysen v. Wassung ... 754
Sale and purchase—Magistrate's finding on facts.	Sale and purchase—Time limit—Damages.
Stofberg v. Altschul ... 752	Scott v. Vellinghausen ... 658
Sale and purchase—Non-delivery of goods sold according to sample—Damages.	Sale and purchase, see Contract ... 870
The defendant, a merchant in this Colony, purchased boots in separate lots and at different prices from the plaintiff, a manufacturer in London, and paid part of the price. On arrival of the boots in the Colony, the defendant rejected several lots, which were wholly unmerchantable and not according to sample, and gave notice to that effect to the plaintiff.	Sale and purchase, see Hotel licence... ... 923
Held in an action to recover the balance of the price and the cost of insurance and freight paid by the plaintiff, that as the plaintiff had failed to deliver certain boots according to sample, the defendant was entitled, by the actio empti , to claim in reconvention delivery of such boots or damages for non-delivery.	Sale by auction, see Option of purchase ... 239
Held further, that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and the price at which the defendant could purchase goods according to sample in the local market, and that in the amount of the contract price should be included the expenses which under his contract the defendant had to bear for the conveyance of the boots to South Africa.	Sale of bequeathed property, see Legacy ... 755
Solomon v. Stefani ... 729	Sale to Non-combatants, see Trading with enemy... 699
	Salesman, see Servant ... 621
	Sanitation, see Municipal regulations ... 401
	Scab Inspector—Acts 28 of 1889 and 20 of 1894.
	M., a duly appointed scab inspector, during the Martial Law regime failed to obtain a permit from the Military to visit his district and discharge his duties. The evidence showed that he was always ready and willing to perform the same. He was thereupon suspended by the Agricultural Department, but did not receive the letter notifying his suspension.
	Held, that he was entitled to the full amount of his salary accruing during the period of such suspension.
	Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government ... 732
	Scots' Law Agent, see Attorney... 890
	Security, see Lease ... 448
	Seller and purchaser—Claim in reconvention — Independent contractor.
	Sivertsen v. Austin ... 35

	PAGE		PAGE
Sequestration, compulsory—Petition of creditor.		of money which, as salesman, he ought to have put into the till.
The petition of a creditor who applies for the sequestration of an estate must either allege that the debtor has committed an act of insolvency, or (1) that his claim is for £100 or more, (2) that the debtor is insolvent, and (3) that it is for the benefit of his creditors that his estate should be sequestered.		Held, that this was an act of misconduct which justified the plaintiffs in dismissing the defendant, that they were not liable for his current month's salary, and that they were entitled to a refund of the passage money.
Hoffmann v. Black ...	83	Robertson & Co. v. Heathorn	621
Sequestration, compulsory—Petition of creditors—Proof of insolvency.		Service of articles outside Colony, see Attorney ...	836
The petition of creditors for the compulsory sequestration of a debtor's estate must state clearly that the estate is insolvent and that it is to the advantage of the creditors that it should be sequestered. The facts that considerable debts are due and unpaid and that judgments obtained against the debtor remain unsatisfied are not conclusive proofs of insolvency, but coupled with other circumstances, raise a strong presumption of insolvency.		Service of stallion.
Krumm v. Black ...	148	The plaintiff, having let his donkey stallion to the defendant, for the purpose of serving the defendant's mares, brought an action in the Magistrate's Court for money alleged to be owing to him for such service, and proved that the stallion had run with the mares, but gave no evidence that he had actually served the mares or that any of them were in foal.
Sequestration—Provisional order—Discharge.		Held on appeal, that the Magistrate had properly granted absolution from the instance.
Friedman Bros. v. Morrison	790	Vermeulen v. Swart...	407
Servant — Salesman — Salary — Misconduct.		Service, short—Costs.
By a contract entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant in England, the former engaged the services of the latter as a salesman in this Colony for three years at a monthly salary, and agreed to pay for his passage to the Cape, with a condition that in case he should leave without sufficient cause before the expiration of the three years, the plaintiffs should be entitled to a refund of the passage money. After serving for two years, the defendant was discovered to have concealed a sum		Jacobssohn v. Pretorius ...	61
		Services of minors—Contract with parents—Manager of operatic troupe.
		The applicant was the manager of a juvenile operatic troupe, consisting of girls under age, who had been engaged by H. in Australia by agreement with the parents for a tour in South Africa. During the tour H. died, and his wife was employed after his death by the applicant (who claimed to have been a partner of H.) as matron of the children. The applicant having dismissed her, she started an operatic troupe of her own, which was joined by several of the girls.

PAGE	PAGE
Held, in the absence of any indication of the parents' wishes, that the applicant had no better right to the services of the children than Mrs. H., and that he was consequently not entitled to an order that they should return to his service.	Subscription dance, see Liquor Acts 305
Seccombe v. Hall 5	Subsidence of buildings, see Party wall 185
Servitude, see Party wall... .. 180	Substitution, see Will 593
Set off, see Magistrate's jurisdiction 244	Succession to (Native) intestate estates, see Native Territories 225
Shares, see Broker 583	Suits between Natives, see Native Territories 225
Share broker—Purchase "on call"—Evidence, oral and written.	Surety and principal debtor—Guarantee—Giving time—Novation.
Colton v. Van Almelo ... 271	The plaintiff obtained judgment in a Magistrate's Court against H. for £60, but a stay of execution was ordered on his undertaking to pay off the debt in monthly instalments of £5, and the defendants guaranteeing the due payment of such instalments. On the debtor's failure to pay the first instalment, a decree of civil imprisonment was obtained against him, to be suspended pending payment by him of £1 per month.
Shareholders' liability, see Company 360	Held, in an action against the defendants for the payment of the first instalment of £5 under their guarantee, that they were not discharged by reason of such order suspending execution.
Share certificates endorsed in blank, see Negotiable instruments 64	Skelton v. Shelvoke and Smith 981
Short delivery, see Arbitrator ... 827	Surety, see Provisional sentence 318
Slander.	Surety and principal debtor—Undue preference—Costs of defending action for undue preference.
Du Plessis v. Blumberg ... 138	The plaintiff advanced to D. the sum of £40, for which the defendant became surety, and the defendant and D. signed an I.O.U. in favour of the plaintiff. In due course D. paid the amount, but afterwards became insolvent, upon which the trustee of his insolvent estate brought an action for undue preference against the
Specific purpose, goods supplied for, see Sale and purchase ... 875
Spoliation—Costs.
Wilson and Cathcart v. Young 1017
Spoor evidence.
Evidence that a certain spoor might have been made by the foot of an accused, the spoor being an old one and not clearly traceable all the way to accused's hut, held not be of itself sufficient evidence to support a conviction.
Rex v. Mofnking and Kotzé 864
Stamp, see Receipt 397
Stay of execution, see Judgment 216
Stock theft, see Acts 44 of 1885 and 35 of 1893 1005
Subletting, see Landlord and tenant... .. 331

	PAGE		PAGE
plaintiff. The plaintiff gave notice of the action to the defendant, and informed him that he would be held liable for the costs, but received no answer. The trustee succeeded in his action, but the Court found that there was no collusion with plaintiff, and ordered the trustee to give an indemnity under the 90th section of the Insolvent Ordinance.		found there was no identity and not such a resemblance as would be calculated to deceive.
Held, in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the £40 and the costs of the previous action from the defendant, as surety, that he was entitled to succeed.		Held, that as both marks had been in use for several years, as no case of actual deception had been proved, and as there was no proof whatever of fraud on behalf of the defendants, who were not aware of the applicants' mark when they designed theirs, there was no ground for the rectification of the register.
Hattingh v. De Wet...	334	Exshaw & Co. v. Van Ryn Wine and Spirit Co. ...	404
Survivor's election, see Will ...	16	Trade mark—Similarity of trade marks—Decision of Registrar.
Suspension, see Attorney ...	223	Rosebank Match Co. v. Jonkopingssoch Vulcans Tandsticksfabricks Akne- bolag ...	616
Tacit agency, see Principal and agent ...	370	Trading with the enemy—Sale to non-combatant.
Tacit agreement, see Harbour Board ...	351	Rossouw v. Vlok ...	699
Theft from employer—Rules of firm.		Trading without licence—Carrying on business of general dealer.
Rex v. Parent ...	997	The accused, a shunter on the railway, bought a job lot of goods at a sale without knowing what was in the parcel and without any intention of dealing in the contents. Finding that the parcel contained watches, he gave away three and sold the remaining three to some railway workmen.
Theft, see Defamation ...	728	Held, that the sale was an isolated act which was not sufficient to prove that the accused had carried on the business of a general dealer.
Time limit, see Building contract	712	Rex v. Kukard ...	302
Time limit, see Sale and purchase	658	Transkeian Territories—Governor's Proclamation— Ultra vires.
Trade-mark — Rectification of register—Deception.		The Governor, acting under powers conferred on him by Statute, issued a Proclamation, whereby it was enacted, inter alia, that in case a certain
The respondents' trade-mark having been registered for nine years, an application was made to the Registrar by the applicants to have their trade-mark registered, but he refused, on the ground of what he conceived to be the similarity of the marks. The applicants thereupon applied to the Court for the rectification of the respondents' registered mark, on the ground that the applicants had used their mark and registered it in France before the respondents registered theirs in this Colony. On a comparison of the marks, however, the Court

PAGE	PAGE
general rate assessed in the Transkeian Territory should remain unpaid for a period of three months, it should be lawful for the Magistrate to issue his warrant, authorizing the levy of the amount by sale of the goods and chattels of the defaulter. The petitioner being in default, some of his goods were attached under such warrant, whereupon he applied for an interdict, restraining the sale on the ground that the enactment was ultra vires. Held, that the provision as to levy of goods was within the power of the Governor in regard to rates actually due. The Proclamation further enacted that should the proceeds of the sale be insufficient to meet the payments due, the defaulter shall, on conviction, be liable to be punished as an idle and disorderly person. Held, that until the petitioner had been proceeded against under this part of the Proclamation, the Court was not in a position to decide as to its validity. Ngono v. Colonial Government ... 635 Treason — Rebellion — Acts of regular warfare. The appellant was tried before a jury for five distinct assaults, with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The evidence shewed that the accused, who was a British subject, committed the assaults while engaged in rebellion, that the assaulted persons were severely beaten, and in some cases kicked without previous trial, and that the accused himself had not been tried for treason or rebellion. There was no evidence that the accused had been recognised by the British authorities as a belligerent, or that the acts complained of were acts of regular warfare, and the best evidence was not	produced that he had been commanded by his superior officers to commit the acts complained of. The judge, at the trial, charged the jury that such evidence would constitute no defence to the indictment. Held, that even if the charge was not correct in law, the judgment should be confirmed in the absence of proof that the acts complained of were regular acts of warfare. Rex v. Louw ... 118 Trespass — Damages — Cultivated land. Where a person has the right to enter upon the land of another for the purpose of repairing a watercourse, the right should be exercised in such a manner as to do no unnecessary damage to the land entered upon. The appellant having such a right, repaired the watercourse by digging up portion of a lucerne field, although there was material available outside the lucerne field, a few yards from the watercourse. Held, that this constituted a trespass for which the appellant was liable in damages. Lipschitz & Toooh v. Sapiero 673 Trespass, see Intordict ... 571 Trust funds—Religious purposes — Right of subscribers to an account. Voerasamy v. Subbaya and another ... 590 Trustee, right of, see Insolvent ... 901 Trustee, signature of, see Power of attorney ... 973 Ultra vires, see Transkeian Territories ... 635 Ultra vires, see Municipal regulations ... 948 Undue preference, see Insolvency 744

	PAGE		PAGE
Undue preference—Ord. 6, 1843— Sec. 84 and 88.		Voluntary payment—Protest— Duress of goods.
Insolvent Estate Eshack v. Allie	742	The plaintiff having under protest paid licence money demanded from him by the C. Municipality for the grazing of his cattle on municipal pasture land, sought to recover back the money so paid, but produced no evidence that the cattle would have been detained unless the money were paid, or that there was duress of any kind.
Undue preference, see Insolvency	510	Held, that the payment must be regarded as voluntary and that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.
Undue preference, see Insolvency	129	Vergotine v. Ceres Municipality	92
" " see Insolvent		Voluntary winding up, see Com- panies' Act	93
" Ordinance	140	Voluntary winding up, see Judg- ment	216
Unlawful detention of child, see Masters' and Servants' Act...	597	Wages, see Master and servant ...	546
Usufructuary.—Expenditure on usufructuary estate—Law costs.		Waiver, see Fixtures	205
A usufructuary and adminis- trator should obtain the leave of the Court before incurring costs of defending an action in respect of a usufructuary estate in which minors are interested.		Waiver, see Letting and hiring ...	916
Ex parte Latogan	78	Warranty, see Adulteration of foods	303
Valuation Court Over valuation —Mistake—Review.		Warranty, see Sale and purchase	609
City Tramways Co. v. Cape Town Town Council	220	Water—Municipal regulations— Act 39 of 1879, Secs. 35 and 37.
Verbal injury, see Defamation ...	728	Under certain regulations framed under Sec. 37 of Act 39 of 1879, the Municipality of G. forbade persons residing within a certain Municipal area to water gardens by means of hose pipes attached to pipes connected with the public water supply within certain hours. One F., being convicted of contravening this regulation, urged (on appeal) that it was ultra vires, inasmuch as the Act gave the Municipality no power to regulate the supply of water.
Verbal lease—Principal and agent —Pleading—Estoppel.		Held on appeal, that under Sec. 37 of the Act the Council had power to make such regula-
C. had entered into a lease of certain premises to F. verbally. C. afterwards refused to exe- cute a written lease, embodying the same terms. In an action to compel C. to execute this lease, or for damages, it was argued that F. was merely an agent.
Held (1) That C. was bound by the verbal lease. (2) That F.'s agency should have been specially pleaded, and (3) That this not having been done, C. was now estopped from denying that F. was a principal.
Fleming v. Commins	879
Verbal revocation, see Guarantee	72
Vesting, see Will	761

	PAGE
tions as they might deem expedient for carrying out the powers as to supply of water, &c., thereby entrusted to them, and that hence the said regulations were intra vires.
Rex v. Farquharson...	865
Water—Weir—Reference to District Water Court.
Estate De Wet v. Marais ...	214
Whipping, see Act 19 of 1861 ...	316
Wholesale butcher — Standing order.
Pinnoy v. African and United Cold Storage ...	296
Wholesale licence, see Liquor Acts ...	307
Will—Construction.
The words in a will: "Should any of my children die" refer to the death of such children after the making of the will and not merely to death after the death of the testatrix.
De Smidt v. Estate Marting	200
Will—Foreign executor—Security—Rule 397.
Ex parte Skelton and others	18
Will—Ordinance 15 of 1845.
The Court set aside a will, the testatrix having neither signed it nor acknowledged her signature in the presence of one of the witnesses.
Dunn v. Estate Dunn ...	132
Will, privileged—Administration—Survivor's election.
Ex parte Huskisson and another ...	16
Will — Prohibition against alienation—Mortgage.
Ex parte Slabbert and others	62
Will — Purchase of estate by beneficiaries—Transfer.
Ex parte Theunissen and others ...	17

	PAGE
Will—Construction—Occupation—Legacy—Habitation—Rates and taxes—Rent.
A testator by his will directed as follows: My wife shall, so long as she shall decide to live in and occupy my house and grounds in my occupation at the time of my death, have the right of free occupation of the same." At the time of his death he was living in a hired house at R., but a residence was in course of construction for him, by contract, on part of an estate acquired by him at K. There was another house on this estate which, at the time of his death, had for two years been and still was in the occupation of a lessee.
Held, in an action by the testator's wife against his executors for a declaration of rights, that the plaintiff was entitled to the free occupation of the estate at K., including the newly-built residence, but not the house occupied by the lessee.
Held further, that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim exemption from the payment of water rates or electric light charges or municipal tenant's rates, but that the estate was liable to pay the Divisional Council rates and the Municipal owners' rates and the necessary expenses to keep the residence in a habitable state of repair and was not entitled to demand from her payment of any rent.
Crosbie v. Crosbie's Executor and another ...	883
Will—Construction—Children—Grandchildren.
Husband and wife, by their joint will, bequeathed certain farms after the death of the survivor to the collective children (gezamenlijke kinderen) of the marriage, on condition that the farms should remain "perpetual family property so

PAGE

long as the law would allow it" to be possessed in succession by the male descendants of the testators' children aforesaid. At the time of the survivor's death there were several sons and daughters living, but one daughter C. had died during the lifetime of both testators, and her sons now claimed the life interest in the share which their mother would have enjoyed for her life if she had survived the testators.

Held, that it sufficiently appeared from the context of the will that in appointing their children as fiduciary legatees, the testators had regard to descendants of a remoter degree than the first, and intended to include children of their deceased daughter C.

Vermaak v. Vermaak ... 687

Will—Construction—Legacy to a class—Grandchildren—Distribution—Vesting—Executors.

The testator by his will made the following disposition: "The immovable property belonging to my estate shall continue under the administration of my executors for the benefit of my grandchildren, and the fruits, rents and interests therefrom accruing shall accumulate and remain with the immovable property under the administration of the executors until my youngest grandchild shall attain his 21st year of age, when, and no sooner, my immovable property shall be realized by public auction and my estate wound up, and the net proceeds be equally divided among my grandchildren, then alive, share and share alike.

Held, that grandchildren born after the testator's death and alive at the time of the youngest grandchild attaining his 21st year will be entitled to share in the distribution.

PAGE

Held further, that the grandchildren acquire no right transmissible to their heirs until the youngest grandchild born, or still to be born, shall attain his or her 21st year: that no distribution can take place so long as any of the testator's children are capable of procreating children, and that in the meantime the dominium is in the executors who hold the property in trust for those who in due time shall be entitled to share in the distribution.

Wentzel v. Brink's Executors (9 Juta, 328) followed.

Black's Heirs v. Estate Black and another ... 761

Will—Legacy—Construction—Direct substitution—Fidei commissary substitution.

Husband and wife, by will, bequeathed certain farms to their three sons subject to certain conditions, one of them being that the sons should show obedience to the testators during the lifetime of the latter. The will added that, if contrary to expectation, any of the three sons should die, the bequest should devolve on their respective sons, subject to the same conditions, including that of obedience to the testators.

Held, that a direct and not a fidei commissary substitution of the grandsons was intended.

Van der Merwe v. Executors of Van der Merwe ... 593

Will—Ord. 15 of 1845.

The Court granted an order, recognizing the validity of a certain will which, per incuriam, had not been signed on each leaf.

Ex parte Meyer ... 671

Winding up as insolvent, see Company ... 360

Winding up, see Company ... 918

	PAGE
Withdrawal of application for renewal of Liquor Licence, see Licensing Court ...	215

Witness—Committal for contempt—Hard labour.

Where a person duly summoned to give evidence in a criminal case before a Resident Magistrate fails to attend without any lawful excuse allowed by the Court, and having been fined in the sum of £5, admits his inability to pay the fine, the Court may commit him to gaol under Ordinance 6 of 1839, but no hard labour can be imposed.

Rex v. Bloem ...	988
------------------	-----

Witness—Privilege—Defamation

A witness is civilly liable for any defamatory statements he may volunteer in the course of his evidence in any judicial proceeding respecting the character of any person not before the Court if such statements are made falsely, maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause. Diepnaar v. Haumann (Buch. 1878, 135) followed.

Cohen v. Carn ...	362
-------------------	-----

Wood-cutting—Power of forest officer.

Peverett v. Gova ...	992
----------------------	-----

Wrongful dismissal, see Master and servant ...	204
---	-----

TABLE OF CASES.

VOL. XIV.—1904.

PAGE	PAGE
Abel, Estate of, ex parte 821	Arderne v. Berman 258
Abel v. Eliot Bros. 246, 288	„ v. Boyce... .. 259
Abel v. Storey 685	„ v. Dauw... .. 1008
Abrahams v. Esmail and Co. 775	„ v. McNaughton and
Abrahamse Bros. v. Kempman	Another 612
and Another 281	Arderne v. Pinkus 29, 1008
Ackerman v. Ackerman and	„ v. Pulvermacher ... 685
Another 263	„ v. Shunshundien ... 1008
Adam v. Adam 95	Arderne and Co. v. Stephan... 10
Adams v. Mohamed 568	“Argus” Company v. Mad-
Adamson v. Ackerman 345	docks 376
Adonis v. Mketshane 507	“Argus” Company v. Peacy 544
Africa v. A.M.E. Church 281	“Argus” Company v. Phil-
African Job Buying Co. v.	lips 319
Phillips 524	“Argus” Company v. Taylor 261
Africa v. Rhenish Mission	Ariefdien v. Siebett and Ste-
Society 945	phan 10
Agenberg and Others, ex parte 778	Armstrong v. Armstrong 571
Ahlbom Gullander and Co. v.	Arnold, Estate of, v. Denefs 454
Merry Bros. 164	Aronstain, ex parte 624
Albertyn, ex parte 817	Aronstain v. Maisel Bros. ... 280
Alford, Wills and Abbot v.	586, 601, 684, 738
Marks 28, 85	Askew and Co. v. Bray and
Alford, Wills and Abbot v.	Another 427
Cootes and Co. 2	Askew and Co. v. Wright ... 775
Alexander v. Muir 509, 576	Ashman v. Van Ellewee 489
Aling v. Durandt 611	Aspeling v. Allie and Another 487
Allen v. Milner 315	Aston v. Aston 90, 431, 1011
Allie v. Hardie 118, 292	Atkins v. Ings and Another... 486
Allie and Others v. Porter	Atmore v. Twine 452
and Barsdorf 55	Attridge v. Heyns 665
Ally, ex parte 90, 157	Attwell and Co. v. Chance ... 61
Ally v. Mohamed 260	Auret, ex parte 360
Amer v. Van der Bijl and Co. 580	Auret v. Davidson 525
Amsinck and Co., ex parte ... 317	Auret v. Smith 437
Anderson v. Caledon Baths	Auret, Estate of, v. Levitan... 854
135, 458	Austen, ex parte 487
Anderson v. Koen 486	Austin v. Morrel and Others 904
Andrews v. Vriedman 916	Austin v. Palmer and Others 671
Annear, ex parte 778
Annear v. Annear ... 218, 481, 686	Bailey v. Bailey 775
Antesoeske v. Stephan ... 30, 256	Bailey v. McDonald 792
Appel, ex parte 822	Bailey v. Colonial Govern-
Appel and Another v. Appel 901	ment 19
Appollis v. Cyster 295	Bakst, Creditors in Estate of,
Arderne v. Bashew 1008	ex parte 927
„ v. Bennen 631	Bam, Estate of, v. Talanda 376, 684

	PAGE
Bam, Estate of, v. Wilson ...	423
Bam and Oliff v. Bloom...	486, 701
Bamford v. Brown ...	313, 426
Bank of Africa v. Epstein and Others ...	665
Bapoo v. Mahomed ...	240
Barker, ex parte ...	337
Barker v. Fountain ...	116
Barnett v. Seidener ...	10
Barret v. Barret ...	614
Barron v. Hennessy ...	281
Barry v. Barry ...	282, 381
Barry Bros. v. Goldstein...	1006
Bartlett, ex parte ...	1012
Bartram v. Burrill and Another ...	28
Bartram and Son, ex parte ...	493
Basson v. Basson ...	471
Basson v. Van Reenen ...	635
Batchelors v. S.A. Breweries 918, 938, 1017,	1021
Bate, ex parte ...	790
Bate v. Allcock...	28
Battenhausen v. Du Plessis...	568
Bayley and Others, ex parte 79,	167
Beake v. Caroleessen ...	715
Bears, Son and Co., ex parte ...	717
Beaufort West Municipality v. Edgcombe ...	319
Becker, ex parte ...	389, 822
Becker v. De Villiers ...	715
Becker v. Hazell ...	436
Beckley, ex parte ...	613
Behr and Others, ex parte 455,	570
Behr and Co. v. Cohen ...	376
Bekker and Others, ex parte 167
Bell, ex parte ...	496
Bell, Estate of, v. Bell ...	755
Beneke, ex parte ...	255
Benner v. Benner ... 62, 274,	570
Bennett v. Bennett and Another ...	91
Bennett v. Cape Estates Syndicate ...	164, 216
Bennett and Baker v. Barry 524,	793
Benning v. Cowling ...	28
Berdien, ex parte ...	778
Bergh, ex parte ...	340
Bergh v. Conrad ...	281
Berhr and Co. v. Cohen ...	376
Berman v. Timrie ...	891
Bernard v. Dampers ...	916
Berning and Another, ex parte 94
Bethune v. Key ...	296
Bevern, Estate of, v. Myburgh 776
Bewbew v. Dennis ...	238

	PAGE
Beyer v. Van der Lith ...	210
Beyers v. Groenewald...	78, 117
Beyleveld, ex parte ...	720
Bezeidenhout, ex parte ...	262
Bird v. Bird and Another...	79, 343
Bird v. Philip ...	1006
Bisset v. Phillips and Another ...	210
Blaberg and Co. v. Ajam...	1010
Black, Estate of, v. Allie and Others ...	817
Black, Estate of, v. Cresswell	426
Black, Estate of, v. Jackson and Co. ...	23, 573, 653
Black, Executors of, ex parte 821
Black, Heirs of, v. Estate Black ...	761
Blackall v. Robertson ...	635
Blake v. Fobian and Others...	314
Blignault, ex parte ...	341
Blignault v. Weintrob ...	454
Blignault v. Wepenaar and Others ...	527, 720
Bloemberg v. Bloemberg ...	274
Blomestein, ex parte ...	10
Board of Executors v. Fisher	484
Board of Executors v. Van Schalkwyk ...	664, 684, 738
Board of Executors and Others v. Hadien ...	285
Robbins v. Le Roux ...	319
Boer v. Delarou...	1
Boesen v. Day ...	180
379, 714, 771, 796,	813
Boisson v. Boisson ...	1014
Boldt and Another v. Heina-man ...	700
Bonsiel and Co. v. Behn ...	931
Boosey and Co. v. Simmons...	9
Booth and Sons v. Harris ...	715
Bosman, ex parte ...	262
„ v. Kets ...	256
„ v. Lewin ...	423
„ v. Roystowski ...	259, 281
Bosman and Arderne v. Win-nitzky ...	893
Bosman, Powis and Co. v. Mialls ...	1010
Botes and Another v. Venter and Another ...	684
Botha v. Botha ...	608
Botha v. Buckley ...	684
Botha v. De Bruin ...	388, 426
Botha and Another, ex parte 341
Bothman, ex parte ...	767
Bothman v. Botes ...	378
Bouchaill and Another v. Drake ...	208

	PAGE		PAGE
Boulton v. De Wit	314	Cape Auction Co. v. Prideaux	1010
Bouwer, ex parte	234	Cape District Building Society
Boyce v. Don	33	v. Jacobsohn	740
Bowers, ex parte	779	Cape Divisional Council v.
Bowers v. Hooper	797	Walsh	261
Boyd and Wife, ex parte	819	Cape Government v. Van der
Boyce v. Coetzee	455	Venter	685
Bracht v. Hansen and Schra-		Cape Marine Suburbs, ex parte
der	686	234, 282
Bradfield, ex parte	1	Cape of Good Hope Savings
Bradfield, Roole and Co. v.		Bank v. Gow and Others	796
Hayward	4	Cape of Good Hope Savings
Brady v. Van Schalkwyk	917	Bank v. Harrison	793
Brand v. Kotzé	150	Cape Produce Agency v.
Brandon v. Stone and Another	916	Peake	9, 219
Breabley v. Cape Glass Co. ...	570	"Cape Times" v. Aron	213
Bredell, ex parte	790	"Cape Times" v. Gibbons and
Brett v. Divisional Council,		Co.	32
Victoria West	283, 355	"Cape Times" v. Herman ...	525
Breytenbach, ex parte	437	"Cape Times" v. McKay ...	213
Brink, ex parte	916	"Cape Times" v. McKenzie
Brink v. Avenant	628	and Co.	1016
Brink v. Strydom	454	"Cape Times" v. Mills	87
Brins, ex parte	934	"Cape Times" v. Pfuhr Bros.	87
B.S.A. Asphalte Co. v. Cape		Cape Town Building Society
Town Gas Co. ... 229, 637,	870	v. McKillop	376
Bromley and Co., Liquidator		Cape Town Gas Co. and Others
of, v. Schenker	93	v. Nyman	792
Brown v. Cohen	739	Cape Town Hebrew Congrega-
Brown v. Kelly	932	tion, ex parte	21
Bubb v. West Indian Building		Cape Town Town Council v.
Association	256	Abrahams	613
Buchanan, ex parte	39	Cape Town Town Council v.
Buchanan, Estate of, v. Way	212	Boyce	116, 613
Budge v. Budge's Executors ...	591	Cape Town Town Council v.
Buffalo Cold Storage Co.,		Colonial Government and
Liquidator of, ex parte ...	850	Another	152, 586
Buffalo Supply Co. v. National		Cape Town Town Council v.
Bank	934	Friedman	211
Buirski v. Phipps	738	Cape Town Town Council v.
Bulawayo Market Co. v. Bula-		Thomas	613
wayo Club	370	Cape Town Town Council and
Bull, Estate of, v. Le Roux		Another v. Goldsmidt ...	664 and Another	150	Caporn and Co. v. Dumas and
Burdett v. Wiggett	485, 934	Another	423
Burger v. De Vos	916	Carney, ex parte	1011
Burns, ex parte	437	Carr and Co. v. Leenders and
Butler v. Butler	262, 858	Co.	779, 783
Butler v. O'Dowd	260	Carson and Another, ex parte	153
Buyskes v. Truike Bros.	377	Cartwright and Co. v. Grif-
Bydien v. Estate Samoa	132	fiths	1015
Byrne, ex parte	420	Cathcart v. Way	167
Byrne v. Byrne	406	Cavanagh v. Hansen ... 60, 166,	258
		Cavanagh v. Thomas	32, 150
		Cavanagh v. Sharpe	892
		Cave's Brewery v. Cape Government Railways	563
		Celliers v. D'Oliveira	281
Cachet, ex parte	611
Cairncross v. Nortje	205
Campbell, ex parte	571
Cantum v. Cantum	712

PAGE	PAGE
Channer and Others, ex parte 767	Cohen and Another, ex parte 725
Chapman, ex parte ... 421	Cohen and Kaplan v. Said and Others ... 740, 892
Chaubaud v. Hartmann ... 89	Cohoon v. Cohoon ... 341, 640, 814
Chinn, Estate of, v. Johannes 931	Coker v. Coker ... 275
Chorits v. Schoolman ... 317	Coleman and Others, ex parte 396
Christie v. Estate Strasm... 776	Coleman and Co. v. Colonial Government ... 235
Cilliers v. Du Toit ... 453	Colesberg D.R. Church, ex parte ... 932
Cilliers v. Van der Merwe 423, 484	Collins, ex parte ... 776
Chubb, ex parte ... 147	Collins and Co. v. Meyers ... 892
City Flour Mills v. Wurth ... 261	Collison, ex parte ... 768
City Tramway Co. v. Siege ... 378, 612	Collison v. Clink ... 666
City Tramway Co. v. Town Council of Cape Town ... 230	Colonial Building Corporation v. Goldstein ... 151
Claassens, Estate of, v. Fourie and Others ... 525	Colonial Government v. Aliwal North Municipality ... 765
Claremont English Church v. Friedman ... 283	Colonial Government v. Bailey ... 877
Claremont Municipal Council v. Blake ... 798	Colonial Government v. Bechuanaland Estate Syndicate, 14, 423
Claremont Municipality v. Clews ... 213	Colonial Government v. Bishop ... 285
Clark v. McNamara ... 276	Coonial Government v. Blaauw ... 797
Clarke v. Mackey ... 5	Colonial Government v. Bonner and Others ... 704
Clarke and Another v. Herman ... 421	Colonial Government v. Connolly ... 634
Clarke and Creswell v. Gordon and Others ... 429	Colonial Government v. Hoole and Co. ... 34
Clear, Estate of, v. Lonsdale 856	Colonial Government v. Kirby ... 775
Cleghorn, ex parte ... 820	Colonial Government v. Lurie ... 342
Cleghorn and Harris v. Corballis ... 891	Colonial Government v. Milborrow ... 210
Clewer v. Cummings ... 1007	Colonial Government v. Onman ... 213
Cloete, ex parte ... 283, 404	Colonial Government v. Padon ... 10
Cloete v. Cloete ... 732	Colonial Government v. Poole ... 9
Cloete v. Edwards and Another ... 791	Colonial Government v. Price ... 213
Cloete v. Taylor ... 62	Colonial Government v. Rich ... 379
Close and Others, ex parte ... 545	Colonial Government v. Van Dyk ... 213
Close and Another v. Hendricks ... 544	Colonial Mutual Life Assurance Co. v. Broomberg ... 742
Coaton and Louw v. Erasmus 8	Colonial Orphan Chamber v. Wahl ... 792
Cochrane and Cherry v. Woodstock Municipality and Others ... 838, 929, 1014	Colton v. Van Amelo ... 271
Coetzee, ex parte ... 342, 798	Combleholme v. Marks, Highman and Co. ... 433
Coetzee, Estate of, v. Coetzee and Another ... 740	Combrinck and Co. v. Lochner ... 376
Coghill v. Queen's Town Licensing Court ... 400	Condes v. Sophie ... 611
Coghlan and Others, ex parte 618	Connolly v. Connolly ... 72
Cohen, ex parte ... 854	Conradie v. Gray ... 675
Cohen v. Carn ... 232, 362	Constein v. Lewis ... 29
Cohen v. Cramer ... 261	Contat Collieries v. Contat ... 388
Cohen v. Hermann and Candard ... 927	Continental Caoutchouc Co. v. Stockill ... 918
Cohen v. Rawbone ... 266
Cohen v. White ... 328

PAGE	PAGE
Continental Consontelium Co. v. Trye and Co. 3	Damons v. Damons 897
Cook v. Cook 666	Daniell v. Ross 313
Cook v. Schreiber 446	Danvers and Co. v. Hernfel... 1008
Cook and Co. v. Young 797	Dart v. Weintrob and Co., 776, 779
Cooke and Others v. Bethell... 8	Darter v. Darter and Another 716, 776
Cooke and Others v. Ochanee... 33	Darter Bros. v. Kretzschmar, 13, 167
Coomer v. Hartford 87	Dauids, ex parte 262
Corballis v. Phillips and Co. 89	Dauids v. Estate Dauids 686, 717, 816
Corbean v. Matthys 30	Davidson, ex parte 890
Corbett, ex parte 376	Davies v. Solomon 664
Cordes v. Pulvermacher ... 618, 770	Davis v. Stevens 389
Cordes v. Van Weenen ... 618, 770	Davies and Katz v. Bernhardt and Another 424
Cornelius, ex parte 667	Davison, ex parte 614
Coronation Estate Co. v. Saber 775	Davitt v. Stephan 319
Cortis v. Broomberg 313	De Beer, ex parte 262, 379
Cotterell, ex parte 816	De Beer, Estate of, v. De Beer 118, 330
Couch v. Martin 855	De Biassis v. Harrison 669
Coulton v. Bull 690	De Blenquy, ex parte 526
Courtenay, ex parte 893, 1011	De Breyn v. Loxton 258
Cowie and Co. v. Israelson Bros. 797	De Bruyns, ex parte 63
Cowley v. Lewis and Another 772	De Lange v. Theron 979
Cowley v. Stephan... .. 319	Dedusey v. Osman 914
Cowley and Co. v. Vassies ... 942	De Greef, ex parte 184
Cowling v. Stableford and Co. 452	De Heton v. Cohen and Another 715
Craford v. Fourie 524	De Jager, ex parte 407
Crauford v. Crauford 193	De Jager v. De Jager 481
Crawford v. Crawford 233	De Jager, Estate of, v. Thyse and Others... .. 19, 571
Creaghe v. Zinkendorf 791	De Jongh, ex parte 667
Cressy v. Shaw 509	De Klerk, ex parte 481, 777
Cronje, ex parte 387	De Kock, ex parte 570
Crosbie, ex parte 387	De Lange v. Theron 948
Crosbie v. Estate Crosbie... .. 857	De Leeuw v. Louw 797
Crosbie v. Crosbie's Executors and Another 833	Delpport v. Nesor 861
Crosbie v. Hennessey 917	Dempers v. Saalmin 612
Cross, Executors of Estate of, ex parte 821	Dempers v. Saalmon 612
Croydon Brick Co. v. Hayward 211	Dempers and Van Ryneveld v. Isaacs 29
Croydon Brick Co. v. Cotterell 1007	Dempers and Van Ryneveld v. Peterson 30
Croydon Brick Co. v. Lance and Co. 32	Dempers and Van Ryneveld v. Strydom... .. 773
Cunha and Co. v. Shalowsky and Another 3	Dempers, Moore and Co. v. Friedgood 774
Cunningham and Another v. Bethel 454	Den v. Den 870
Cunningham and Another v. Rutherford 144	Dennis and Another, ex parte 799
Cunningham and Another v. Salonika 485	De Smidt v. Estate Marting... 200
Cutler v. Stephan 281	De Smidt v. Trunt 485
Dalvi and Another v. Ahmed 178	De Swardt, Estate of, and Others v. Surveyor General and Others 389
Daly v. Lategan 86	De Villiers, ex parte 1, 80, 337, 367, 386, 455, 820, 875

	PAGE		PAGE
De Villiers v. De Kock	486	Drewfs v. Drewfs	128
De Villiers v. Dow... ..	422	Dreyer and Others v. Duke...	1010
De Villiers v. Haupt	931	Dubis v. Hyman	792
De Villiers v. Honikelsky and Another	257	Duffus and Co. v. De Villiers	498
De Villiers v. Louw	568	Duggan, ex parte	456
De Villiers Bros. v. Twine and Another	421	Duminy v. Day	309
De Villiers, Larsson and Co. v. De Kock... ..	831	„ v. Dreyer	5, 314
De Villiers and Others v. False Bay Fish Co.	918	„ v. Gamba	258
Devenish and Another, ex parte	778, 934	„ v. Vink	2, 8
De Vries, ex parte	686	Dunn v. Broomberg	738
De Waal v. Ahberg	259	Dunn v. Estate Dunn	132
De Waal v. Marks	421	Du Plessis, ex parte	720
De Waal v. Van der West- huysen	340	„ v. Blumberg	138
De Waal and Another, ex parte	904	„ v. Mandelstam	212
De Waal and Co. v. Burger...	261, 281	„ v. Minnaar	9
De Waal and Co. v. Colyn ...	424, 631	Du Preez v. Reid	379
De Waal and Co. v. Du Ples- sis	212	Du Preez v. Stoman	991
De Waal and Co. v. Fick ...	213	Durand, ex parte	816
De Wet v. Bernade	29	Durant and Co. v. Poole... ..	210
„ v. Bloom	402, 583	Duthie v. Uhrbrook	931
„ v. Dusseau	775	Du Toit, ex parte	262
„ v. Manchester	424	Du Toit v. Domingo	661
„ v. Prinsloo	376	Du Toit and Others, ex parte	167
„ Estate of, v. Marais	169, 214	Dyason v. Nortje	613
De Witt v. Skippon	783	Dyer, ex parte	224, 341, 455
Deyzel v. Deyzel	716	Eaton v. Eaton... ..	96
“Diamond Fields Advertiser” v. Peacey	379	Eaton v. Van der Spuy	486
Dickenson and Co. v. Whales	212	Eaton, Estate of, v. Luyt ...	738
Dicker, in re Insolvent Estate of	283	Eaton, Robins and Co. v. Miller	28
Dienar, ex parte	1011	Eaton, Robins and Co. v. Steensma	1005
Diepnaar v. Nel	256	Eaton, Robins and Co. v. Swanepoel	426
Dimdore v. Dimdore	882, 932	Ebroiken v. Vink	29
Distributing Syndicate and Others v. Frank	259	Edmeades, ex parte	337
Dominicus v. Taylor and An- other	4	Edwards, ex parte	233, 821
Donaldson, ex parte	932	Edwards v. Myburgh	612
Dordrecht D.R. Church, ex parte	799, 815	Efroiken v. Outram	10
Dormehl v. Scholtz	617, 796	Eilenberg v. Abrahams ...	1006
Dose, ex parte	790	Elfert Co., Insolvent Estate of, v. Elfert	262
Douglas, ex parte	219, 819	Eliason v. Eliason	525
Douglas v. Glass	28	Elliot Bros v. Bartlett ...	612, 857
Dreyer v. Dreyer	830	Elliot, ex parte	823
Dreyer v. Samsodien	116	Ellis v. Kemp	799, 878
		Ellis v. Smith	717
		Ellis, Kislingbury and Co. v. Bergl	1013
		Elson, ex parte	570
		Elston, ex parte	613
		Elton v. Elton and Another...	95
		Elton and Others, ex parte ...	20
		Embeson v. Mitchelmore...	260
		Engelbrecht, ex parte	818
		Epsiken v. Priem	1
		Epstein v. Sieradski	5

	PAGE
Equitable Fire Insurance Co. v. La Grange	454
Erasmus, ex parte	452, 498
Erasmus v. Van der Merwe...	377
Eshack, Estate of, v. Allie...	739
Estenberg v. Cooper	728
Euviard, ex parte	452
Evans, ex parte	368
Everett and Another v. Ellenbogen	213, 258
Exshaw and Co. v. Van Ryn Wine and Spirit Co.	404
Eyre v. Moriarty	379
Fairbairn v. Pepper	243
Falkiner, ex parte	487, 819
Farmer, Estate of, v. Seldon	684
Farmers' Co-operative Society v. Long	151
Farmers' Co-operative Society v. Roberts	525
Farmers' Co-operative Society v. Quinn	151
Faudel and Another v. Tuckey	901
Faure, Estate of, v. Van der Bijl	580
Faure and Zietsman v. Weintrob	28
Faure, Van Eyk and Co. v. Estate Richards	1010
Faure, Van Eyk and Co. v. Zin	340
February, ex parte	934
Federal Supply Co. v. Africa	454
Federal Supply Co. v. Buffalo Supply Co.	165, 570
Federal Supply Co. v. Coetser	379, 1007
Federal Supply Co. v. Logan Bros.	684
Feltham v. Schlater	939
Fernandez v. Fernandez	863
Festus v. Jonker	667
Fichat, ex parte	255
Field and Co. v. Lewin	634
Fincham, Estate of, v. Christie	772
Finday and Co. v. Hempel, 476,	535
Findlay and Co. v. Zaland...	424
Firnhaber and Another, ex parte	720
Firth, ex parte	168
Flaun v. Gerhaad and Hay...	404
Fleming v. Commins	879
Fletcher, ex parte	769
Fletcher v. Viviers	854
Fletcher's Retail and Others v. Van Dyk	281
Fletcher's Wholesale v. Lewin and Sons	797

	PAGE
Fletcher's Wholesale and Others v. Skuy	150
Foot, ex parte	765
For. v. Lawrence Co. and Others	809
Ford v. Christ	564
Ford v. Murray	1005
Forrest v. Alexander	634
Fortuin v. Weintrob	8, 485
Fouches, ex parte	777
Foster v. Du Plessis	376
Foster and Others v. Roestoff and Others	388
Fouche and Others, ex parte	499
Foulds v. Foulds	224, 431
Fourie, ex parte	481
Fourie v. De Vries	377
Fourie v. Fourie	493
Fourie and Others, ex parte ...	816
Fourie and Others v. Mostert and Others	1014
Fowlie and Another v. Henson	213
Frank v. Mellon 257...	257
Fraser, ex parte	406
Fraser and Another, ex parte	1011
Freeman v. Cape Divisional Council	668
Freemantle, ex parte	949
Freemantle v. Mills	799
Friberg v. Lloyd and Another	426
Friedlander and Du Toit v. Hatschen	797
Friedlander and Du Toit v. Griffiths	1010
Friedlander and Du Toit v. Manchester	775
Friedman v. Adendaal	780
Friedman v. Belman, 212, 258,	794
Friedman v. Shapiro	774
Friedman Bros. v. Morrison 771, 790,	814
Friedmond v. Solomon	629
Fryer v. Estate Petersen...	610
Fuller, ex parte	283, 456, 768, 816, 857
Furman v. Zerf and Another	423, 740
Gacula v. Dickerson	204, 297
Garage Continental Co. v. Van der Riet	578, 796
Gardiner and Co. v. Mackie and Co.	485, 543
Gardiner and Easton v. New Zealand Steamship Co.	1017
Garlick v. Lurie	775
Garlick v. Vink and Co.	209

	PAGE		PAGE
Garlick v. Zackon	257, 796	Grand Junction Railways, Debenture Holders of, v. Hills and Others	551
Garlick and Others v. Albert	856	Grand Junction Railways, Liquidators of, v. Hills and Others	551
Garlick and Others v. Dicker	426	Grand Junction Railways, Receivers of, v. Wal ker	233, 1018
Garlick and Others v. Kuhl- man	209	Greef, ex parte	686
Garner, ex parte	163	Green v. De Kock	164
Gately, ex parte	256	Green v. Le Roes	38
Gazo, ex parte	666	Green v. Theron	777
General Estate and Orphan Chamber v. Tahaar and Another	1008	Green and Co. v. Kretzsch- mai	32, 167
Gep v. Gep and Another	897	Green, Estate of, S.A. Mutual Green and Sea Point Muni- cipality v. Boyce	498
Gericke v. Wagemann	32	Greenberg and Co. v. Lewis, 855,	891
Gezwint, ex parte	778	Greenshields and Stephan	86
Gibbs v. B.S.A. Asphalte Co.	917	Griffiths and Others, ex parte	168
Gibson, ex parte	614	Grill v. Luckol	524
Giddings v. Giddings, 406, 620,	798	Gripper and Another, ex parte	1011
Ginsberg, ex parte	499, 525	Grobelaar, Tromp and Co. v. Christie	286
Ginsberg v. Hoffman and Others	814	Gromer, ex parte	854
Glass v. Glass ... 14, 16, 685,	716	Grundling, ex parte	1
Glasgow v. Glasgow	700	Gruneberg v. Dreyer	426
Gluck v. Nathan	796	Gruneberg v. Schiefelbein	204
Glynn v. Joseph and Another	916	Gulley v. Gavin	33
Godeham v. Estate Hutt	613	Guthrie v. Miller and An- other	857
Goedhals v. Stegman	1006	Guthrie and Theron v. Jacobs and Co.	211
Goldberg, Insolvent Estate of, v. Bert	740	Guthrie and Theron v. Vil- joen	164
Goldblatt, ex parte	1	Gutsche, ex parte	147
Goldschmidt v. Day	772	Haak v. Basson	946
Goldschmidt, ex parte	819	Haakensen v. Haakensen	893
Golder v. Howes	499	Haarhoff, ex parte	613
Goldman v. Botha	61	Hack v. Dreyfus and Co.	492
Goldschmidt, ex parte	1011	Hackenberg v. Hackenberg	260
Goodson, Estate of, v. Ingram	1008	Hadie, ex parte	246
Gordon, ex parte	769, 810	Hadie v. Hadie	134
Gordon, Estate of, v. Wood ...	715	Halbroth and Son v. Calcraft	319
Gordon Mitchell and Co. v. Bakst	791	Hales, Caird and Co. v. Boe- sen	485, 740
Gordon Mitchell and Co. v. Kaplan	116	Hall v. Hall	129
Gordon Mitchell and Co. v. Rawbone	524	Hall, Estate of, ex parte	18
Gotze v. Bergl	771, 821	Hall, Estate of, v. Wallis	339
Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co. v. Davis	548	Hamilton v. Albert	257
Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co. v. Meyers	891	Hamilton v. Matthie	318
Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co. v. Moss	86, 218	Hamilton and Another v. Alexander	454
Gow, ex parte	720	Hamp v. Hamp	717
Graamans Bros. v. Reynard ...	95	Hanau v. Buchanan	4, 32
Graham v. Graham	55, 214	Hanau v. Sterner	856
Graham, Estate of, v. Smith and Another	116
Grand Junction Railway, in re	1015
Grand Junction Railways in re	1015

INDEX.

ix

	PAGE
Hanau v. Van der Krast ...	318
Hands, ex parte ...	499
Hanover D.R. Church, ex parte ...	548
Hansant v. Manchester ...	86
Hansen, in re ...	902
Hansen v. Estate Hansen...	1012
Hanson v. Kahn ...	151
Hammersley-Heenan v. Thomas	140
Harbrodt v. Herman ...	497
Hardy v. McSweeney ...	13
Hardy v. Wilks ...	2
Harness, Estate of, ex parte ...	893
Harkeson v. Harkeson ...	773
Harpur v. Fincham ...	712
Harries and Co. v. Haniball...	256
Harris, ex parte ...	918
Harris v. Doyle ...	497
Harrison v. Harrison, 218, 319,	342
Harrison v. Myburgh ...	776
Hartman, ex parte ...	455
Hartz v. Garlick ...	816
Hasseriis v. Marks...	725
Hassiem, ex parte ...	546
Hattingh v. De Wet ...	334
Hattingh v. Robertson ...	294
Haylett, ex parte ...	184
Hazell and Another, ex parte	230
Hedding, ex parte ...	255, 280
Heddon v. Sawkins ...	193, 570
Behir v. Table Bay Harbour Board ...	808
Heide v. Boyce ...	86
Heinemann v. Berry ...	1006
Hellig v. Hellig ...	292
Hendrick v. De Beer and Another ...	792
Hendricks v. Hendricks ...	264
Hennessy v. Estate Carmichael	770
Hennessy v. Mutter ...	568
Herald v. Tyler ...	761
Herbert, G. and T., v. Twine	378
Herman v. Fryer ...	313
Herman v. Kadir ...	150
Herman v. O'Bree ...	10
Herman v. Uhrbrock ...	611
Herman v. Viviers ...	423, 453, 716, 916
Hermans v. McMullen ...	8
Hertzog, Estate of, v. McMullen ...	86
Heinaman v. Scholtz ...	86
Hendricks v. Keyser ...	212
Hendricks v. Wood ...	211
Heydenrych, ex parte ...	15
„ v. Dunman ...	566, 812, 909
„ v. Frame... ..	377, 632

	PAGE
Heydenrych v. Hootor... ..	357
„ v. Jeffery... ..	472, 691
„ v. Salodien ...	2
„ v. Sonning ...	32, 1006
„ v. Taylor ...	1006
Hiddingh v. Estate Hertzog	79, 168, 219, 246
Hiddingh v. Wooding ...	212
Higgs, ex parte ...	717, 1012
Highman and Others v. Fra-sewisky and Others ...	792
Higrant, Chantrey and Co. v. Pratt ...	664
Higson v. Higson ...	935
Hildebrant, ex parte ...	235
Hildebrant v. Hildebrant, 455,	611
Hill and Co. v. Catto... ..	891
Hill and Co. v. McLachlan ...	164
Hill and Co. and Another v. McGregor ...	163
Hills v. Colonial Government	39, 233
Hillier v. Hillier ...	571, 811
Hime, ex parte ...	147, 255
Hirshberg, ex parte ...	115
Hitchcock, ex parte ...	916
Hitge, Estate of, v. Botha ...	421
Hobden v. Risely and McIntyre ...	491
Hogdson, ex parte ...	778
Hodgson v. Estate Hodgson ...	588
Hodgson, Executors of, ex parte ...	476
Hoffman v. Black ...	83
Hoffman v. Soker ...	115
Hofmeyer, ex parte ...	280
Hofmeyer v. Valentyne and Co. ...	32
Hofmeyer and Son v. Lategan	423
Hohn v. Leach ...	39
Holdenson and Another v. McKenzie and Co. ...	775
Holiday v. Johns ...	931
Holland v. Sherwood ...	393
Holtenhoff v. Ginsberg and Another ...	814
Honiball v. Cape Central Railways ...	546
Hopkins v. Platjes ...	715
Hotz v. Du Plessis ...	259
Hovey v. Hine ...	798
Howitz, ex parte ...	798
Hudson, Estate of, v. Wurth...	261
Hudson, Vrede and Co. v. Finkestein Bros. ...	685
Hudson, Vrede and Co. v. Reuck ...	544
Hugo, ex parte ...	407, 455

	PAGE
Hugo v. Penderis	30
Hugo v. Snyders	931
Hugo, Executors of, ex parte ...	381
Hugo, Estate of, v. Kriegler...	568
Hulin v. James	61
Hull v. Mulder	916
Humansdorp Divisional Council, ex parte	1011
Humpel v. Humpel	640
Humphreys v. Humphreys ...	243
Hunter, ex parte	169, 714
Huskisson and Another, ex parte	16
Hutchons, Estate of, v. Galpin	154
Hutt v. Melekov and Another	545
Hutton v. Strydom	28
Hyman v. Hyman	97
Hynd v. African Banking Corporation Co.	19
Ilaum v. Gerhard and Hay...	637
Immelman and Co. v. Hoffman... ..	151
Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Adams	423
Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Bartie and Sons	423
Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Dieterle	544
Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Epstein	544
Inglesby v. Hermann	665
Ingram, ex parte	341
Ingram v. Ingram	778
Innes v. McElmee	738
Ireland v. Penkin	85
Irwin v. Thomson	536
Jackson v. Haupel... ..	213
Jackson v. Hammond	1004
Jackson and Spence v. Colonial Government	892
Jacobs, ex parte	933
Jacobs v. Jacobs	63, 432
Jacobssohn v. Du Plessis ...	29
Jacobssohn v. Pretorius ...	61, 115
Jagger and Co. v. Havenga ...	376
Jagger and Co. v. Myers ...	1009
Jagger and Co. and Others v. Gruskin and Polliack ...	313
James v. Friedrikson	686, 799
Janneck, ex parte	234
Jarsedine v. Maquinnolt ...	569
Jeffrey v. Herbert	339
Jeffrey v. Herman, I and J ...	544
Jelliman v. Coetzer... ..	1009
Jeppe, ex parte	312

	PAGE
Johnson v. Cunningham and Cortese	282
Johnson v. Ernie	716
Johnson v. Lacy	5
Johnson v. Scarr	33
Jones v. Herold	256
Jones v. Stephan	60
Jones and Co. v. Blake	797
Jonker, Estate of, v. Jonker...	931
Jordaan and Wife, ex parte ...	822
Joseph v. Le Roux... ..	211
Joseph v. Nathan	358
Joseph and Co. v. Pretorius...	2
Joubert, ex parte	151
Joubert and Others, ex parte	686
Jurgons v. Baitels	378
Juritz v. Payne	613
Juta and Co. v. Shawe ...	281, 319
Kaiser v. Banks	150
Kaiser v. Shenker and Co. ...	477
Kaiser Bros. v. Cape Town Town Council	354
Kaiser Bros. v. Rosen	331
Kalk Bay Municipality v. Joseph	94
Karmer, Estate of, v. Daly ...	456
Kannemeyer v. Chetty Bros...	3
Kanterowitz v. Stranack ...	772
Kaplan, ex parte	613, 716
Karriem v. Harris	583
Katz and Co. v. Schemer... ..	931
Keller v. Steyn and Others. 15.	94
Kelly and Co. v. Hermann ...	632
Kendrick v. De Beer and Another	1009
Kennedy, Executors of, ex parte	856
Kenner and Co. v. Israelson Bros.	715
Kent, ex parte	667
Kerr, ex parte	820
Kets v. Noorden	84
Kichnan v. Marais	634
Kieft, ex parte	437
Kilfoil, ex parte	255
Kilgour v. Sonnenberg	201
Kilfoil, ex parte	27
King, ex parte	455
King Bros., ex parte	232
King Bros. v. Rowan... ..	239, 315
Kitchin, ex parte	162
Klaas, ex parte	10
Klein, ex parte	821, 857
Kleinhaus, ex parte	283
Kleyn, ex parte	719
Knee Bros. v. Sebha Bros. ...	281
Knoesen v. Theron	292

	PAGE
Kobbler Bros. v. Delpport...	544
Koch v. Clays	1
Koch and Dixie v. Ross	261
Koenig v. Landeschut...	73, 90, 97
Konigsberg v. Stanislaws and Another	978
Konza v. Konza	898, 923
Koppel, Ltd., v. Kirby	740
Koster v. Braaf	917
Kosher Supply Co. v. Gold- berg Bros.	259
Kotzé, ex parte	1013
Kotzé v. Andrews	714
Krijnau v. Hyte	34
Kreft, ex parte	570
Kriel v. Union-Castle Co....	686
Krige v. De Villiers	776
Krige and Others, ex parte ...	1011
Kroese, Estate of, v. Kroese and Others	392
Kroon v. Kroon	811
Kruger, ex parte	15, 821
Kruger v. Faesche and Co. ...	856, 1016
Kruger v. Price	640
Kruger v. Venter and An- other	1008
Krumm v. Black	148
Kuils v. Union-Castle Co. ...	616, 717, 881
Kupfer, ex parte	456
Labe and Another v. Paterson and De Hertton	510
Lacey v. Jacobs	821
Laidlaw, Mackill and Co. v. Baker, Baker and Co. ...	1019
Laité and Co. v. Goldsmid ...	616
Laité and Co. v. Hessen ...	11, 74
Laité and Co. v. Peregrino ...	33
Laité and Co. v. Scarles	1009
Lambrechts, ex parte	773
Lands Development Co. v. Miles and Another	1009
Landsberg v. Weeber	685
Landsberg v. Wilnach	684
Landsberg, Estate of, v. Rah- man and Another	633
Lang v. Colonial Government	782
Langenhoven v. Keller	611
Langford v. Miles, Boyd and Co.	502
Lapidus v. Hoffman	317
Lategan, ex parte	78, 685
Lategan v. Colonial Govern- ment	935
Lategan v. Holm and Another	612, 774

	PAGE
Law Society v. Greening...	169, 223
Law Society v. McLeod	836
Lawrence v. Gross and Others	916
Lawrence v. Lawrence... ..	940
Lawrence and Others, ex parte 429, 897
Lawrence and Co. v. Bruhns...	2
Lawrence and Co. v. Bailey and Co.	891
Lawrence and Co. v. Hartford	32
Lawrence and Co. v. Matz and Another	210
Lawrence and Co. and Others, ex parte ...	923
Lawrence and Co. and Others v. Ah Young	337
Lawrence and Co. and Others v. Lurie	792
Lawrence and Co. and Others v. Segal... ..	2
Lawrence and Co. and Others v. Symthe and Co.	855
Lawrence and Co. and Others v. Swatt and Another ...	210
Lefevre and Others v. Bordi- goni	425
Leng v. Roode... ..	666
Lennon, Ltd., v. Lewis ...	261, 497
Lennon, Ltd., v. Schapera ...	1010
Lennox, ex parte	916
Lennox v. Murray and Ste- wart	850
Le Roes, ex parte	167, 235
Le Roex, ex parte	935
Le Roux, ex parte	285, 570, 818
Le Roux v. Malherbe	833, 867
Le Roux v. Theunissen ...	224, 260
Leslie v. Parkins	796
Levenson v. Vurick	858
Levin and Co. v. Schimpers...	209
Levy v. Koenig	793
Levy v. Lazarus	428
Levy and Another v. Coliwas	236
Lewin and Others, ex parte ...	675
Lewin and Others v. Luntz and Another	211
Lewin and Son v. Fourie ...	1006
Lewis, ex parte	166, 611, 892
Lewis v. Ferris	454
Lewison v. Appel	339
Liberman and Buirski v. Day	426
Liberman and Buirski v. Estate Cilliers	498
Liberman and Buirski v. Ros- souw	454
Liberman and Buirski v. Stain- dien	1
Liebenberg v. Liebenberg...	211

PAGE	PAGE
Lillienfeld v. Waldek... .. 770	Lots v. Vos... .. 114
Lillienfeld v. Walker... .. 686	Loubser, ex parte 19
Lind v. Nathan... .. 61	Louw, ex parte 1006
Lindenberg v. De Jongh... .. 86	Louw v. Winterbach... .. 930
Lindenberg and De Villiers v. Wesner... .. 773, 931	Louw v. Wahl... .. 1006
Lindsay, ex parte 214	Lucke, Estate of, v. Anderson... .. 8
Lippert, ex parte 685	Lucke, Estate of, v. Bell... .. 740
Lipschits v. Botha... .. 61	Luckie v. Oman... .. 515
Lipschits v. Delpport... .. 314	Luckhoff, ex parte 893
Lipschits v. Fourie and Others... .. 813	Luckhoff v. Herman... .. 524
Lipschits and Another v. Sapiro... .. 673	Lumb, ex parte 16
Liquidator Grand Junction Railways v. Receivers Grand Junction Railways and Others... .. 639	Lumaden v. East London Municipality... .. 500
Lissack and Co. v. Cartwright... .. 856	Lumaden and Others, ex parte 168
Lithman, Landsberg and Co. v. Bishop... .. 917	Luntz v. Baetz... .. 917
Lithman, Landsberg and Co. v. Bryars... .. 1007	Luyt, ex parte 545
Lithman, Landsberg and Co. v. Cohen... .. 378	Luyt v. Allnutt... .. 612
Lithman, Landsberg and Co. v. Feldman... .. 150	Lyons, ex parte 611
Litton, Insolvent Estate of, v. Boas... .. 210, 422	Lyons v. Greenland, 544, 568, 793
Lloyd v. Lloyd... .. 381, 807	Lyons v. Kellaway... .. 12, 89
Lloyd, Estate of, v. Galpin... .. 154
Lobascher v. Cohen and Carn... .. 249	Maberly v. Brocklebank... .. 4
Lobascher v. McFarlane... .. 980	McAlister, ex parte 166
Lochner, Estate of, v. Pienaar... .. 795	Macauley v. Jumbo Co. and Another... .. 171
Lochner and Another v. Gro-man... .. 4, 76	McAteer, ex parte 15
Logan v. Colonial Government... .. 341	McCallum, ex parte 28
Logan and Co. v. Clews... .. 314, 421	McCrum v. Dulcken and Co... .. 33
Logie v. Vorster... .. 543	McGrath, ex parte 255
Lombard, ex parte 527	McGregor v. Penkin... .. 61
Logie v. Vorster and Another... .. 543	McKay v. Mahomet... .. 774
Lombard, ex parte 527	McKenzie and Co. v. Table Bay Harbour Board... .. 285, 535, 827
Lombard v. Estate Clarke, 741, 855	McKillop v. Hedden... .. 164
Lomnitz v. Steensma... .. 791	McKillop v. McKillop... .. 815, 892
London and Lancaster Fire Insurance Company v. Andrews... .. 524	McLeod, ex parte 765
London and Westminster Bank v. Receivers of Grand Junction Railways... .. 178, 639	„ v. Barnard... .. 793
London Ham Co. v. Scholtz... .. 261	„ v. La Grange... .. 86
London Wagon Works v. Hoffman... .. 379	„ v. Mare... .. 793
Longlands v. Busch... .. 260	„ v. Strydom... .. 793
Lord and Another, ex parte 224	„ v. Welcome... .. 793
Lorents v. Lorents... .. 114, 525	McNaughton v. Smellerkamp... .. 775
Lotter v. Botha... .. 777, 819	McQuirk v. Abrahams... .. 151
Lotter v. De Wit... .. 612	McQuirk v. Brennan... .. 151
Lots, ex parte 262	Makgosa v. Flag Mini... .. 934
	Maitland, ex parte 337
	Maisel Bros. v. Aronstain... .. 534
	Maisel Bros. v. Clingman and Another... .. 856
	Makek v. Moore... .. 263
	Makrai, ex parte 819
	Malan v. Strydom... .. 567
	Malan and Another, ex parte 157
	Malcolmson, ex parte 255
	Malcomess and Co., ex parte 666
	Malcomess and Co. v. Cary, 715, 930
	Malcomess and Co. v. Farmers' Co-operative Co... .. 124

	PAGE
Malherbe, ex parte ...	208, 255, 614
Mallah and Co. v. Allie ...	797
Malmesbury Board of Executors v. Kennedy ...	567
Malmesbury Board of Executors v. Van der Spuy ...	543
Mamewecke v. Olinski ...	535
Maney v. Maney ...	918
Mangold Bros v. Keun ...	1009
Mann, ex parte ...	527
Mann, ex parte , in re Moss... 215	215
Marais, ex parte ...	165, 388, 455
Marais v. Marais ...	282
Marais v. Harrison ...	567
Marais v. Van Zyl ...	423
Marais, Estate of, v. Bauermeester ...	772
Marchand v. Talanda ...	566
Marcus v. Goodman ...	3
Maree, ex parte ...	616
Marks, Estate of, v. Penkin	257
Marnitz, ex parte ...	342
Marona v. Blackbeard ...	638
Marquard v. Feinberg... 525	525
Marquard and Co. v. Robertson and Co. ...	213
Marsh, ex parte ...	616
Marsh, Estate of, v. Clews ...	856
Marsh, Estate of, v. Colyn ...	5
Marsh, Estate of, v. Dumas... 916	916
Marsh, Estate of, v. Jordaan and Another ...	378
Marsh, Estate of, Nottage ...	5
Marsh, Estate of, v. Savage... 28	28
Marsh, Estate of, v. Smith ...	4
Marshall v. Marshall ...	668, 798
Martens v. Martens, 527, 668, 798	798
Martin v. De Jongh ...	60
Master v. Cotton ...	918
Marting, Estate of, v. Berghuys ...	164
Masmkey v. Table Bay Harbour Board ...	613
Mason, ex parte ...	301
"Master," The, v. Executors Estate Alexander ...	618
"Master," The, v. Cotton ...	918
"Master," The, v. Executors Estate Goldberg ...	618
"Master," The, v. Executors Estate Hoffman ...	3
"Master," The, v. Executors Estate Liebenberg... 4	4
"Master," The, v. Executors Estate Pienaar... 714	714
"Master," The, v. Viljoen ...	314
"Master," The, v. Wiggett ...	1009, 1011

	PAGE
Matare, Burns and Co. v. Nuns ...	423
Matare, Burns and Co. v. Smallberger ...	568
Maw v. Fox ...	391, 399
Max v. Max ...	320
Maxey v. Maxey ...	819
Maxwell and Earp v. Blumberg ...	210
Maxwell and Earp v. Cohen... 212	212
Maxwell and Earp v. Kleger... 743	743
Maxwell and Earp v. Lewis ...	255
Mayisela v. Resident Magistrate, Somerset East ...	781
Maynard v. Maynard ...	850
Mbulwana, ex parte ...	14, 224
Mecca Café, ex parte ... 439, 545	439, 545
Mecca Café, Liquidator of, v. Webner ...	360
Meiring, ex parte ...	1014
Mendelsohn and Co. v. Broude	379
Mendelsohn and Co. v. Nel ...	379
Mengers and Another, ex parte	935
Mentor, ex parte ...	1011
Merrington v. Le Grange... 422	422
Metelerkamp, ex parte ...	635, 932
Metropolitan Advertising Co. v. Taylor ...	29, 258
Meyer, ex parte ...	34, 617
Meyer v. Boasaf and Another... 61	61
Meyer v. Cornelis and Another ...	684
Meyers and Others, ex parte ... 157	157
Michau and De Villiers v. Honikelsky and Another ...	33
Middleton v. Porter and Barsdorf ...	634
Mihaly v. Moskovik ...	640
Milborn, Gullander and Co. v. Hempel ...	486
Miles v. Jagger and Co. ...	742
Miller and Co. v. McFadyen and Thorn ...	4
Mills and Sons v. Van der Spuy ...	260
Milne and Sladdin v. Jackson and Co. ...	9
Minnaar, ex parte ...	1005
Mitchelson, ex parte ...	1014
Mohamet v. Ishmail ...	506
Mohr v. Twycross ...	336
Moll v. Arend ...	798
Moll v. Heineman ...	164
Moller v. Crowe ...	281
Moller v. Lloyd and Another, 1, 163	163
Mongamele, ex parte ...	90
Moodie, ex parte ...	340
Moody, ex parte ...	526

PAGE	PAGE
Moody, Tutors in Estate of late, ex parte ... 527	Naude, ex parte ... 739
Moolman v. Bernade and Another ... 30	Naude v. Roberts ... 257
Moore v. Colonial Medical Council ... 483	Nchorin and Another, ex parte ... 90
Moore v. Moore ... 15, 263, 570	Negrini v. Frost ... 797
Moorrees v. Hoffman ... 498	Nel and Others, ex parte ... 690
Moorrees v. Pentz ... 716	Nelson, ex parte ... 892
Moritz v. Murray ... 609	Nelson v. Nelson ... 574, 685, 1020
Morris, ex parte ... 376	Nepgen, ex parte ... 255
Morrison v. Langton ... 770	Netherlands Bank v. Brand ... 932
Morser and Co. v. Morris and Co. ... 257	Netherlands Bank v. Gordon and Co. ... 612
Morum, ex parte ... 381, 437	Netherlands Bank v. Russell ... 770
Mostert, ex parte ... 115, 1015	Nettleton v. Nettleton ... 109, 565
Mostert v. Muller ... 568, 1009	New Hudson Cycle Co. v. Stevens ... 775
Mostert v. Rous ... 2	Newman and Another, ex parte ... 184
Motroden v. Hassiem ... 814	Newton and Stewart v. Hermann ... 568
Mouat, ex parte ... 545	Ngatwyn v. Ngatwyn ... 870
Mountain View Quarry Co., ex parte ... 783	Ngili v. McLeod ... 241
Mouton v. Karg ... 665	Ngono v. Colonial Government ... 635
Mowbray Municipality v. Muller ... 401	Niekoles and Co. v. Aigiros ... 317
Mtembu v. Webster ... 408	Nicolas v. Nicolas ... 499
Muir v. Alexander ... 525	Niekerk, ex parte ... 1005
Muller v. Hobbs ... 975	Nieuwoudt v. Registrar of Deeds ... 231
Muller v. Koonin ... 667	Niven and Another v. Redfern and Another ... 798
Muller v. Sibbert and Others ... 685	Noach v. Raubenheimer ... 792
Muller Bros. v. Lombard ... 973	Nolan v. Sibbett and Another ... 339
Mulvey v. Cape Government Railways ... 894	Nolte Bros. v. Riach ... 376
Mulvihah and Others, ex parte ... 893	Nomadina v. Sissing ... 380
Murphy v. Colonial Government ... 776	Nones v. Farmlia ... 339
Murphy and Another, ex parte ... 166, 381	Noodtskop v. Twine ... 259
Murray v. Findlay and Co. ... 237	Noon v. Noon ... 1009
Murray and Co. v. Horsburgh and Another ... 486, 633	Norden v. Bosman, Powis and Co. ... 813, 923
Murray and Co. v. Nieburg ... 716	Norden v. Vink ... 116
Murray and Stewart v. Ramage ... 779	Norden and Others v. Kets ... 421
Myburgh v. Amardien ... 633	Northampton Bank v. Ward and Co. ... 566
Myburgh v. Myburgh ... 330	Nourse, ex parte ... 790
Mzubelo and Others v. Ndaba and Others ... 768, 817	Nourse v. "Cape Times Ltd.," and Others ... 283
Naggs, ex parte ... 20	O'Brien, ex parte ... 624
Nangle v. Orous ... 778, 817	Odendaal, ex parte ... 234
Nannelly v. Daria and Co. ... 775	Ohlsson v. Cohen, H. ... 426
Nasieba and Others, ex parte ... 499	Ohlsson v. Cohen, S. ... 426
Nathan v. Lipman ... 34	Ohlsson v. Magor ... 314
National Bank v. Graaf ... 680	Ohlsson's Breweries v. Magor ... 315
National Bank v. Kraemer and Co. ... 931	Ohlsson's Breweries v. McNeilage ... 685
National Bank v. Policansky and Others ... 524	Ohlsson's Breweries v. Thomson ... 153

PAGE	PAGE
Olivier and Co. v. Gouws ... 798	Peterson v. Griffith ... 718
Olivier v. Weintrob ... 212	Peeverett v. Gova ... 992
Olivier, Estate of, v. Van Zyl ... 129	Pfeiffer v. Hubach ... 1
Olivier and Another, ex parte ... 717	Philip Bros. v. Combrink ... 932
Oosthuisen v. Engelbrecht ... 917	Philip Bros. v. Walter ... 775
Oosthuisen v. Wassung ... 754	Phillips, ex parte ... 387
Oosthuisen, Executors of, ex parte ... 881	Phillips v. Louw ... 339
Oosthuys and Another v. Van Heerden ... 1009	Phillips and Co. v. Louw ... 454
Orchard v. Bredasdorp Licensing Court ... 569	Philpott v. Bromley ... 213
O'Reilly, ex parte ... 565	Philpott v. Bridges ... 814
Orlandini v. Collins ... 796	Philpott v. Holznichter ... 338
Orlandini v. Strydom ... 86	Philpott v. Philpott and Another ... 265
Osborne v. Osborne ... 388, 516	Pienaar, ex parte ... 424
Paarl Board of Executors v. Ecksteen ... 1007	Pienaar v. Executors Estate Sluiter ... 340, 516, 522, 531
Paarlse Landaankoop Maatschappij, ex parte ... 341, 437	Pieterse, ex parte ... 932
Pam, ex parte ... 581	Pietersen, ex parte ... 820
Pantry v. De Beer, Z., and C. ... 339	Pietersen v. Estate Gabrielse ... 320
Parker, ex parte ... 62	Pietersen v. McLachlan ... 378
Parker v. Parker ... 285, 381, 620	Pinn v. Elliot ... 504
Parker v. Reed ... 720	Pinnoy v. African and United Cold Storage ... 296
Parkin v. Spies ... 794	Pittman, ex parte ... 421
Parks v. Parks ... 661	Plate Wall Co v. Lipman ... 87, 259
Parrot and Co. v. Pierpoint ... 260	Plate Wall Co. v. McLeod ... 87
Parry v. Wright ... 810	Pollock v. Pulvermacher ... 667
Pascol, ex parte ... 719	Poolos, ex parte ... 779
Paterson and Another v. Pitt and Another ... 315	Port Elizabeth Cold Storage Co. v. Marnicowitz ... 314
Paterson and Another v. Twine and Another ... 515	Port Elizabeth Quoit Club, ex parte ... 21, 224
Paterson, Boyes and Co. v. Hamilton ... 904	Porter v. Kader ... 501
Paterson, Boyes and Co. v. Hamp ... 770	Porter and Maasdorp v. Alice and Others ... 260
Pauling, ex parte ... 545	Powrie v. Walker ... 30
Payne, ex parte ... 27, 854	Pretorius, ex parte ... 79, 820
Peacock and Others v. Bailey ... 780, 858	Pretorius v. Van Wyk ... 930
Pedersen v. Hempel ... 814	Pretorius and Co. v. Soekel and Another ... 524
Pedersen v. Kennedy ... 85, 209	Price and Co. v. Webner, 630, 851
Pedersen v. McKay ... 760	Price Bros. v. Wessels Bros. and Another ... 544
Peek Bros. v. Australian Brickfields ... 439	Priest v. Heaven ... 259
Peiser v. Booysen ... 396	Prince v. Myburgh ... 382
Penkin, Creditors of, ex parte ... 93	Pringle, ex parte ... 168
Percival, ex parte ... 255	Pritchard v. Newman ... 256
Perl and Co. v. McKendrick ... 1013	Proudfoot, ex parte ... 545
Perram and Besley v. Larey ... 282	Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Auret ... 776
Perold v. Bailey ... 116	Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Cosay ... 1010
Perold and Lewis v. Silverus ... 9	Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Harck ... 814
Perserverance Society of Port Elizabeth v. Davis ... 882	Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. v. McLeod ... 281, 378

	PAGE
Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Pentz	892, 1008
Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Pfaff	498, 634
Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Riddell	378
Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Seaman	498
Purcell, Yallop and Everett v. Steensma	314
Quinn and Others v. Lalor ...	9
Rabinowitz, ex parte , 151, 214,	486
Rabolini v. Newman	771
Raffaele and Another v. Bindeman	176, 212
Raganelli v. Lipschitz... ..	624
Rainier, ex parte	769
Raner v. Colonial Secretary ...	247
Raphael v. May	850, 893
Rathfelder and Another, ex parte	14
Rautenbach, Executors of, ex parte	382
Reed v. Port Elizabeth Town Council	946
Reeler v. Cole	28
Rees and Another, ex parte , 20,	184
Reid v. Fish	611
Reid v. Lategan	568
Reid and Co. v. McGregor ...	892
Reid and Nephew v. Sellar ...	1007
Reiner's Trustees v. Boyce ...	792
Reitz, ex parte	930
Retief, ex parte	285
Retief v. Retief	12, 34, 271
Rex v. Anim... ..	368
„ v. Baartman	316
„ v. Ball	488
„ v. Benning	197
„ v. Bloem	988
„ v. Botha	565
„ v. Besuidenhout	496
„ v. Cohen	994
„ v. Charteris	646, 785
„ v. De Stadler	398
„ v. Du Toit	990
„ v. Easton	198
„ v. Endries	987
„ v. Enslin and Another ...	598
„ v. Farquharson	865
„ v. Fish	297
„ v. Grant	995
„ v. Greening	21
„ v. Griman	261
„ v. Hammerschlag... ..	600
„ v. Harris	429

	PAGE
Rex v. Hayes	989
„ v. Hess	906
„ v. Hope and Another ...	674
„ v. Jaffa... ..	193
„ v. Jenkinson	374
„ v. Jessub	368
„ v. Johns... ..	398
„ v. Jones... ..	650
„ v. Korton and Others ...	1006
„ v. Kreesse	724
„ v. Kriek... ..	504
„ v. Kukard	302
„ v. Lang	301
„ v. Liebenberg	597
„ v. Lis (alias Silver)... ..	833, 992
„ v. Louw... ..	118, 432, 530
„ v. Miller	303
„ v. Mangoba... ..	507
„ v. Marais	452
„ v. Matyolweni and Others	505
„ v. Mofuking and Another	864
„ v. Montsioa... ..	906
„ v. Myburgh	651
„ v. Niekerk	476
„ v. Parent	997
„ v. Paul	199
„ v. Plaatjes	312
„ v. Rathbone	487
„ v. Robbie and Others ...	1000
„ v. Roos	307
„ v. Sango	117
„ v. Standen	397
„ v. Taylor	304
„ v. Toooh	195
„ v. Torr	981
„ v. Walker and Others ...	305
„ v. Williams	833
„ v. Wilson	1006
„ v. Wynne	999
Reynolds, ex parte	455, 1012
Reynolds v. Goodmanson... ..	116, 382, 424
Reynolds Factory v. Blake ...	665
Reynolds Factory v. Maritz...	666
Reynolds Vehicle Co. v. Hill	87
Rhenish Mission v. Africa ...	908
Rhodes v. Rhodes and Another	779, 854
Rhodes, Estate of, v. Hartigan and Others	589
Ries, ex parte	255
Rige v. De Jager	783
Rimer v. White... ..	30
Rivas v. Black	268
Rix v. Rix	78, 368
Rix, Estate of, v. Clements ...	234
Robertson, ex parte	611
Robertson v. Robertson ...	169, 224

	PAGE
Robertson and Co. v. Garvie...	776
Robertson and Co. v. Heat-horn	621, 741
Robertson and Co. v. Wolf-aardt	87
Robinsky v. Norton	854
Rochester Brick Co. v. Ellen-bogen	213
Rondebosch Municipal Coun-cil, ex parte	716
Roos v. Ohetty	714
Roos v. Sacks and Another ...	814
Rosebank Match Co. v. Jonko-pingsoch Vulcans	616
Rosenberg v. Lurie... ..	5
Rosenberg v. Worthington ...	616
Rosenblatt v. Will	61
Rosenblatt and Another v. Will	61
Ross and Co. v. Rous	5
Rossouw v. Vlok	699
Rothman, ex parte	767
Rousseau, ex parte	683
Roux, ex parte	231, 1011
Roux and Another v. Cosay...	930
Rowe v. Fisher... ..	109
Rowe v. McGarry	551, 931
Rubin, ex parte	740
Rudiger v. Muller... ..	980
Runciman and Co., ex parte ...	39
Russell, Executors of Estate of, False Bay Fish Co. ...	918
Rutter v. Black and Another	715
Rutter v. Taylor	87
Saber v. Kansley	691, 982
Sachs v. Liebenberg	1007
Sachs v. Van der Merwe... ..	665
Sadler v. Seccombe... ..	29
Safeidien, ex parte	817
S. Leger v. Robinson	775
S. Saviour's Church, Clare-mont v. Friedman... ..	4
Samoa, Executors of Estate of, ex parte	156
Sanderson v. Rugg... ..	892
San Georges v. Epstein	611
Saunders v. Saunders	34
Savage and Sons, ex parte ...	640
Savage and Sons v. Venter ...	664
Scanlen v. Bert	918, 1011
Schalbe v. Smith	772
Schar v. Norman	33
Scheltema, ex parte	14
Scheuble, Estate of, v. Galpin	154
Schoeman, ex parte	617
Schoeman v. Potgieter	256
Scholtz, ex parte	819

	PAGE
Scholtz and Co. v. Lubalin ...	339
Schonnberg, ex parte	773
Schoonul and Co. v. Clarke ...	1010
Schreiber v. Schreiber	487, 812
Schultz v. Kets... ..	568
Schultz v. Rossouw	792, 1006
Schur and Another v. Loub-ser	423
Schwalbe v. Smith... ..	740
Schwartz v. Fick	223
Schwizer v. Ngqwabe	1008
Scott, ex parte	387
„ v. Dawson... ..	797
„ v. Heesen... ..	5, 150
„ v. Heineman... ..	261
„ v. Kirby	797
„ v. Starck	854
„ v. Thieme	823, 921
„ v. Vellinghausen	658
„ W. and G., ex parte	10
„ W. and G., v. Manches-ter	422
Seagull and Co. v. Aronson ...	743
Seale, ex parte	717, 767
Seale v. Toll and Courtis ...	292
Searight and Co. v. Attmore...	612
Searle and Co. v. Haise	917
Searle and Son v. Van Nie-kerk	742, 776
Seccombe v. Hall	5
Secretary for Agriculture, ex parte	153
Sedgwick, ex parte	87
Sedgwick v. Sedgwick	235
Sedgwick, Estate of, v. Nor-den	259
Sedgwick and Co., Receivers of, ex parte	315
Siefontein v. Fourie	454
Sekelini v. Sekelini	225
Sellar Bros. v. Clews	665
Sellar Bros. v. Higgs	892
Sellar Bros. v. Jackson	257
Sepel and Another v. Getz ...	1007
Serrurier v. Isaac	279
Seymour, ex parte	1
Shackell v. Shackell	545
Shanahan v. Shanahan	76
Shapiro v. Freedman	685
Shareholders in Buffalo Sup-ply Co., ex parte	817
Shaw, ex parte	714
Shaw v. Shaw	783, 816, 920
Sheldon, ex parte	930
Sheppard v. McIntosh and Another	793
Sheppard v. Heyns... ..	1009
Sheppard v. Van Reenen... ..	1009

PAGE	PAGE
Sheppard and Co. v. Steer ... 8, 23, 164	Sooye v. Lawrence and Co. and Others ... 800, 803
Sheriff v. Sheriff ... 34, 214	Sothron v. Gabier ... 378
Sherwood v. Holland ... 917	Sikengan, ex parte ... 381
Shunn v. South African College ... 613	Simcocks v. Wynberg Licensing Court ... 882
Shutler, ex parte ... 821	Simpson, ex parte ... 341, 551
Shutte v. Hedley Bros. ... 78, 158	Sindler v. De Villiers ... 900
Sibert, Master and Another v. Muller ... 1, 8	Siverton v. Austin ... 35
Siff v. Cohen ... 665	S.A. Association v. Clews ... 30
Silberbauer v. Karsten ... 163	S.A. Breweries v. Blomson ... 260
Silberbauer and Another v. Jones ... 814	„ v. De Villiers ... 613
Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller v. Capes ... 9, 257	„ v. Harding, 792, 814
Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller v. Stephan ... 9, 453	„ v. Hodgson ... 528
Sieberhagen v. Keller and Another ... 322	„ v. Martiensen ... 245
Skeaar v. Weintrob and Others ... 1010	„ v. Moss ... 164
Skead v. Twine ... 741, 775	„ v. Schippers ... 210
Skelton v. Shelvoke and Another ... 981	„ v. Nobbe ... 797
Skelton and Others, ex parte ... 18	„ v. Zin ... 281
Skippon v. De Wet ... 691	S.A. Brickfields v. Wilson and Another ... 10
Sklaar v. Insolvent Estate Weintrob ... 799	S.A. Live Stock Co. v. Lochner ... 376
Slabbert and Another, ex parte ... 15, 62	S.A. Milling Co. v. Miller ... 544
Slade, Alexander and Co. v. Lazarus ... 1008	S.A. Mineral Water Co. v. Chetty ... 33
Slinger, Estate of, v. Pienaar ... 213	S.A. Mineral Water Co. v. Cohen ... 33
Smalberger v. Keller ... 772	S.A. Mineral Water Co. v. Vincent ... 33
Smiles v. Freedberg, Cohen and Co. ... 448	S.A. Mutual v. Erasmus ... 931
Smit, ex parte ... 613	„ v. Notje ... 314
Smit v. Lazarus ... 1010	„ v. Lochner ... 339
Smit v. Makatesi ... 931	„ v. Verster ... 931
Smit and Another v. Duckworth and Another ... 934	S.A. Newspaper Co. v. Theunissen ... 776
Smith, ex parte ... 15, 219	S.A. Produce Co. v. Norman ... 210
„ v. Englebrecht ... 1007	S.A. Trade Protection v. Siedradski ... 685
„ v. Markatesi ... 855	Soyers v. Soyers ... 282, 439
„ v. Martin ... 612	Shannon v. Brodie ... 456
„ v. Pfister ... 619	Shapiro v. Friedman ... 456
„ v. Smith ... 62, 427, 619	Shaw Bros. v. Johnstone ... 454
„ v. Yudelman ... 525	Smit v. Wessels Bros. ... 453
„ and Another, ex parte ... 819	Spangenberg v. Spangenberg, 63, 94
„ and Another v. Elburgh ... 855	Spence v. Bromley ... 338
„ and Co. v. Herman ... 486	Spengler v. Aimian ... 854
„ and Co. v. Tupach ... 792	Spiers, ex parte ... 934, 1011
„ and Co. v. Van As ... 86	Spilhaus and Co. v. Ajam ... 665
Smithers and Another, ex parte ... 1013	Spilhaus and Co. v. Engel ... 798
Snyman, ex parte ... 820	Spilhaus and Co. v. Muller Bros. ... 338
Snyman and Another, ex parte ... 617	Spilhaus and Co. v. Newman ... 797
Solomon v. Stefani ... 729	Spilhaus and Co. v. Romain and Another ... 797
	Spilhaus and Co. v. Vickers Bros. ... 211
	Spilhaus and Co. v. Werner ... 72

	PAGE
Stableford and Co., in re ...	498
Stableford and Co., ex parte	668, 767
Stableford and Co. v. Rimmel	613, 683
Stamper and Zoutendyk v. Heyns	149
Standard Flour Mills v. Cohen	150
Stande, ex parte	820
Stande v. Stande	286
Stansfield v. Stansfield	807
Star Aerated Water Co., ex parte	546
Stark v. Broomberg	135
Stassen, ex parte	39
Staude v. Staude	62, 570
Steer v. Chetty	546, 777
Steer v. Roelke	791
Steinhobel, ex parte	499
Stephan v. Myburgh	612, 854
Stephan v. Myers	771
Stephan Bros. v. Riach	1
Stevens v. Hager	423
Stevens v. Stevens	131
Stevenson, ex parte	799
Steyn v. Steyn and Others	755
Steyn v. Lochner	319
Steyn v. Steyn and Another	755
Steyn v. Vink	259
Steyn and Another v. Isaac	379
Steyn and Another v. Tahaar and Another	771
Steytler, ex parte	285
Steytler v. Auchmut	377
Steytler v. Khan	686
Steytler v. Venter and Another	544
Steytler and Others, ex parte	233
Stockenstrom and Others, ex parte	12
Stoffberg v. Altschul	743
Stoffberg v. Meyer	426
Stone and Another, ex parte	820
Stracey v. Adams	898
Strauss, ex parte	427
Struben v. Pitt	891
Strydom, ex parte	686
Strydom and Others v. Blignault and Others	572
Sturk Co. and Others v. Caralis	740
Stuttaford and Others v. Henson	259
Suburban Estates v. Jankelowitz	85
Suburban Estates v. Muslak and Another	4

	PAGE
Suburban Municipal Waterworks v. Cochrane and Cherry	169
Sullivan v. Sullivan	489
Sundstrom, ex parte	618
Sutherland v. Sutherland	427, 621, 798
Sutton, ex parte	20
Sutton, ex parte	23
Sutton v. Philip Bros.	73
Swan, ex parte	714
Swanepoel v. Wentzel	891
Swart v. Swart	11
Swartz v. Fick	153
Swartz v. Oelofse	237
Swemmer v. Calitz	792
Swinton v. Corballis	340
Syfret, ex parte	381
Syfret, Godlonton and Low v. Harris	524
Syme v. Colonial Government	527
Synker v. Estate Westerman	258
Synne, ex parte	301
Syrkin, ex parte	498
Table Bay Harbour Board v. Bucknall Line	351
Table Bay Harbour Board v. McKenzie and Co.	260
Table Bay Harbour Board v. Marx	427
Taborski and Co. v. Bruckner	213
Taborsyski and Co. v. Hoffenberg	29, 396
Tait, Estate of, v. Cilliers	256
Tait, Estate of, v. Heesen	256
Talanda v. Aron	260
Tancred v. Beukes	616
Tantsi, Estate of, v. Executors Estate Nchela	943
Tarr, ex parte	1005
Taylor v. Tapnach	617
Taylor and Gibson v. Behr and Co.	419
Tearnan v. Parr	498
Telfer v. Cape Town Gas Co.	426
Tempest v. Tempest	455, 742
Templeman v. Robinson	2
Tennant v. Zwaigenhaft	326, 485
Ternan v. Tucker	793
Tetley and Fleming v. Buffalo Supply Co.	282
Theron v. Burger	150
Theron v. Green	73
Theunissen, ex parte	11, 15
Theunissen v. Burns	606

	PAGE		PAGE
Theunissen and Others, ex parte ...	17	Van Oler, Estate of, ex parte ...	545
Thompson, ex parte ...	17, 341	Van der Berg v. Mare... ..	567
Thompson v. Jameson... ..	770	Van der Byl, ex parte	668
Thompson v. McKenzie and Co.	346	Van der Byl v. Scott and Smuts	8
Thompson v. Thompson ...	63, 617	Van der Byl and Co. v. Barnard	260
Thorne v. Bataillou	1007	Van der Byl and Co. v. Cassiem... ..	544
Thwaites v. Mocke	164	Van der Byl and Co. v. Kaber	565
Tilly, Estate of, v. Gruneberg ...	150	Van der Byl and Co. v. Kulman	163
Titterton, ex parte	822	Van der Byl and Co. v. Merry	116
Toach, ex parte	579	Van der Byl and Co. v. Minnaar	164, 338
Toach v. Le Roux	644	Van der Byl and Co. v. Rossouw	1010
Toerin v. Dieterle	116	Van der Byl, Estate of, v. Snyman... ..	338
Tooch v. Le Roux	904	Van der Byl and Others, ex parte	933
Tothill v. Marshall... ..	33	Van der Byl and Others v. Abel... ..	813
Toucher v. Oosthuizen... ..	875	Van der Heever, ex parte ...	164
Townsend v. Irvine	339	Van der Heever v. Cloete... ..	90, 220
Townsend v. Sibbert and Another	484	Van der Heever v. Van der Heever	234
Townsend v. Stephan... ..	210, 260	Van der Hoff v. Paddon... ..	381, 634
Trachet, ex parte	892	Van der Horst v. Coley	1018
Tran, ex parte	738	Van der Merwe, ex parte	570, 616, 817, 818
Trediga v. Mellman and Another	792	Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government	526, 732
Treurnich and Another v. Estate De Villiers... ..	493	Van der Merwe v. Van der Merwe's Execufors	593
Trollip v. Orange River Irrigation Co.	498	Van der Merwe v. Van der Merwe and Another	131
Trott Bros. v. Marsel Bros.	570, 703	Van der Pas and Others v. Dusseau and Co.	933
Truter, ex parte	691, 934	Van der Riet, Estate of, v. Skippon... ..	798
Truter v. McMullen	3	Van der Sandt De Villiers and Co. v. De Wet	775
Truter v. Smit	856	Van der Sandt De Villiers and Co. v. Louw	797
Truter v. Truter	712	Van der Spuy v. Laing	1008
Tucker v. Tanner	855	Van der Spuy v. Van der Spuy... ..	455
Tule v. Attaway... ..	1010	Van der Spuy v. Van der Spuy... ..	618
Tunstall and Grant v. Paulse ...	652	Van der Venter and Others, ex parte	427
Turner v. Shepherd Bros.	283	Van der Vliet, ex parte	10
Turnbull v. Stewart	1015	Van der Vyver, ex parte	545
Turock v. Christopoulos and Another	50	Van der Walt and Another, ex parte	63
Twentyman, ex parte	34	Van der Westhuysen, ex parte	234, 427, 613
Uitenhage D.R. Church, ex parte ...	234
Uitenhage and Port Elizabeth D.R. Churches, ex parte ...	341
Uys v. Moll and Co.	677
Uys v. Uys	404
Van Aardt, ex parte	487
Van Blerk v. Eckstein... ..	313
Van Blommestein v. Holliday ...	64
Van Bonde, ex parte	790
Van Boom v. Viissier, 296, 406, 501
Van Breda, ex parte	1014
Van Breda v. Turok	854

	PAGE
Van der Westhuysen v. Kruiehieft	453
Van Dijk, ex parte	778
Van Driel v. Venter and Another	819, 881
Van Drusen and Another v. Booysen... ..	792
Van Eaden, ex parte	819
Van Eaden v. Van Eaden, 742,	806
Van Es, ex parte	34
Van Heerden, ex parte	219
Van Heerden v. Estate Van Heerden	438
Van Heerden v. Van Heerden and Others	489
Van Heerden v. Werth	61
Van Holdt v. Blake	105
Van Niekerk, ex parte ,	351, 482, 611
Van Niekerk v. Will and Others	424
Van Niekerk and Co. v. Faber	1013
Van Reenen, Estate of, v. Vickar	261
Van Renen v. Cowley	1005
Van Rensburg and Another v. Trystman	668
Van Riet v. Mussett and Another	33
Van Rooyen v. Sack	282
Van Schalkwyk, ex parte	778
Van Tonder, ex parte	571
Van Wyk, ex parte	83, 664
Van Wyk v. Terblans... ..	1003
Van Wyk v. Marks and Others	151
Van Zyl v. Van Gerve	486
Van Zyl and Others, ex parte	822
Van Zyl and Buissinné v. Hardy	257
Vanner v. Bridges	813
Varkevisser v. Lewis	486
Vassiss v. Yaxoglong	798
Verasamy v. Subbaya and Another	590
Veir v. McNaughton	568
Venter, ex parte	234
Venter and Others, ex parte ...	777
Venter, Executors of Estate of late, ex parte	893
Vergotine v. Ceres Municipality	92
Vermaak v. Butchunsky	259
Vermaak v. Vermaak... ..	687
Vermulen v. Swart... ..	407
Versfeld v. Allie	794
Versfeld v. Donough	485
Verster v. Fletcher... ..	976

	PAGE
Verster and Another v. Pienaar	318
Verster, Van Wyk and Co. v. Pienaar	571
Vice, ex parte	19, 233
Vick v. Blake	150
Victor v. Estate Du Plessis ...	33
Vimpanz and Co. v. Van Gerve	498
Visser, ex parte	376, 1016
Visser v. Yaxoglong	798
Visser and Co. v. Jarus and Another	930
Viviers, ex parte	262
Vlok, ex parte	313
Vlotter, ex parte	393
Vogts, ex parte	396
Von Holdt v. Buhr	793
Von Holdt v. Bulders... ..	917
Von Holdt v. Martin	772
Von Welligh v. Von Welligh... ..	129
Vorster, in re Estate of late... ..	893
Vosloo v. Myburgh... ..	1001
Vyner, ex parte	228
Waddell and Another, ex parte	1014
Wadner and Another v. Todd	776
Waite v. Hansen and Schrader	740
Wakelin and Cunningham v. Frost	3
Wakelin and Cunningham v. Salonika... ..	211
Walden, ex parte	10
Walker v. Martin	1013
Walker v. Walker	72
Walker, Estate of, v. Kannes	30
Walker, Estate of, v. Karries	665
Walker and Jacobsohn v. Norden	995
Wallis v. Michelson	891
Wallwork v. Orange River Irrigation Co.	498, 817
Walsh, ex parte	743
Walsh and Walsh v. Erskine	284, 567
Walsh and Walsh v. Sadler...	820
Walton and Co. v. Peacy... ..	379
War Department v. Table Bay Harbour Board... ..	487
War Department v. Wahl... ..	612
Ward, ex parte	151
Warner v. Honikman	772
Warner, ex parte	935
Warner v. Schultz	574
Warner and Co. v. Banso ...	791

PAGE	PAGE
Warner and Co. v. Graham and Another 376	Wiehman, ex parte 182
Warner and Co. v. Impey ... 893	Wiggett v. Mortimer 453
Warrington, ex parte 427	Wiid v. Wiid 357
Watcham, ex parte 285	Wilcocks v. Berstein 224
Watson v. Pilbrow 10	Wiley and Co. v. Isaacs and Co. 184
Watson and Co. v. Jones, 856, 863	Wiley and Co. v. Van der Spuy... .. 257
Watson and Co. v. Wiener and Co. 211	Wilkinson v. Aron... .. 377
Weakley, ex parte 666	Will v. Shea 33
Wege v. Ally 257	Williams, ex parte 19
Wege v. Latagan 813	„ v. Jupp 117
Weideman, ex parte 427	„ v. Morris 665
Weidner v. Rabie 568	„ v. "The Master" ... 437
Weinand, ex parte 317	„ and Wife, ex parte ... 235
Weintraub and Co. v. Voesee 891	„ Estate of, v. Nel ... 998
Weintrob v. De Villiers and Schaverin 388	Williamson v. Bernhardt and Others 776
Weintrob and Co. v. Philip and Another 776	Williamson and Another v. Shepstone and Others ... 117
Weintrob and Penkin v. Steer 1012	Willmer v. Rance 605
Wells v. Wells 635	Willmot, ex parte 631
Wells v. White 800	Willmot, Estate of, v. Estate Sayers 544
Wentzel v. O'Brein 665	Wilson, ex parte 115, 437, 817
Wentzel v. Stephan 114	„ v. A.M.E. Church ... 1007
Wentzel and Another, ex parte 571	„ v. Boyce... .. 1006
Wernich, ex parte 667	„ v. Excelsior Benefit Society 607
Wessels v. Cohen 30	„ Phipps 211
Wessels v. Ferreira 855	„ v. Stephan... .. 164
Wessels v. Gamba 486	„ Son and Co. v. Dicker 340
Wessels v. Kyle 258	„ Son and Co. v. Nyman and Wife 740
Wessner v. Poggenpoel 792	„ and Cathcart v. Young 1017
Westerman and Penkin, Estate of, v. Blows 33	Windvogel v. Bishop of S. John's 499
Western Wine Co. v. Erk... .. 797	Winkelmann, ex parte 499
Western Wine Co. v. McDonald Bros. 261	Winkelmann and Others, ex parte 821
Western Wine Co. v. Norman 2	Wipner v. Holland 29
Weyers, ex parte 157	Wise v. Wise 224
White, ex parte 34, 882	Withinshaw v. Riddell ... 378
White v. Fotheringham ... 544	Wishart, Estate of, v. Van Muren 259
White v. Gibbons and Co. ... 9	Wolf, ex parte 717
White, Ryan and Co. v. Cohen 4, 544	Wolf and Wife, ex parte ... 285
Wiber v. Fish... .. 611, 942	Wood, ex parte 12, 499, 944
Wiber v. Van Weenen 684	Wood, Williams and Co. v. Duggan 855
Wibes, ex parte 821	Woelf, Heineman and Co. v. Gordon 613
Wicht v. Homewood 793	Woelf, Heineman and Co. v. Van Vuuren 797
Wienand v. Davids 257	Woolven v. Mitchell 932
Wiener and Co. v. Esack... .. 317	Worcester Butchery Co., ex parte 1012
Wiener and Co. v. Jacobs ... 741	Wordon, Estate of, v. Saiset... 738
Wiener and Co. v. Omar and Another... .. 259
Wiener and Co. v. Rabinowitz 149
Wiener and Co. v. Van der Byl 180
Wiener, Schwab and Co. v. Jackson, B. and J. 376

	PAGE		PAGE
Wrench v. Crafford	115	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Wright v. Wright	104	Davis	569
Wright v. Rossouw	665	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Wright and Another, ex parte	819	Godlieb	743
Wright and Another v. "Cape		Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Times" Ltd.	581	Kisch	423
Wright and Others, ex parte ...	382	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Wrymon v. Solomon	605	Lipschutz	310
Wynn v. Wynn and Another	334	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
		Margalis	259
Yolo v. Majujeze	308	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Young v. Mulvihall... ..	403	Sayers	32
Younghusband v. Brockle-		Zeederberg and Duncan v.
bank	624	Van Biene	798
		Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Zahn, Estate of, v. Vlok... ..	611	Weintrob	257
Zeederberg and Duncan v.		Zgili v. McLeod	241
Andrusier	379, 497	Zietsman v. Clifford	891
Zeederberg and Duncan v.		Zuid Afrikaansche Weeshuis,
Cohen	424, 685	ex parte	816
		Zuidmeer v. Heynes	1006

Stanford Law Library

3 6105 063 309 368